A great many think of the clos-ing episode of "The Man Who Came Back," as the most satisfying in the whole play. It is not so subtle, perhaps, as the one immediately pre-ceding it, but it does bring the story to a conclusion that is quite appropriate. The scene between father and son in this battle of wills is finely enacted, and makes the last word well worth waiting for. The

The fact that "The Better Ole," the comedy with music which will be the attraction at the Brandeis for five days beginning next Sunday will be presented by Mr. and Mrs. Coburn, is a guarantee of the best in scholn'ly stagecraft.
