Laws of Cake Making

A very experienced cook can stir up a cake without considering her ingredients carefully. She knows by instinct when the cake looks right; and if it does not look right, she knows what she must do to it.

If one studies recipes, she will find that the fat and milk are always related to each other, that as the one goes down, the other goes down. This is because fat behaves as liquid in the oven.

Another relationship exists between the eggs and the sugar. Egg in a batter acts as a liquid, therefore, as the egg is increased the liquid is decreased.

Eggs and baking powder depend upon each other. One stiffly beaten egg white is the equivalent in leavening power to one-half teaspoon of baking powder.

Most people have preconceived notions as to the good qualities of certain fats in cake. I suppose we all agree that butter is the ideal cake fat, probably because we are used to it.

Co-Operation

Miss Gross will be very glad to receive suggestions for the home economics column or to answer, as far as she is able, any questions that her readers may ask.

that cake had she known there was laid in it!

Quotations.

The following quotation is from the article referred to above: "In cake making, manipulation is one of the chief factors in determining the quality of the product. In an ordinary cake the methods of combining ingredients is not in itself important, except as it controls the amount of mixing and beating.

Neither fat, sugar, nor egg can satisfactorily be increased alone beyond a certain point. All these must be increased together in such proportions that the effect of the fat and sugar on the one, hand will offset that of the egg."

The Roll of Honor

By Katherine Lee Bates.

We read the list at sunset, when the sky Was all a-stream with splendors multiform, Rose-color lit to flame, that still swept by, Bright spirits thronging from the battle-storm.

Against the royal purples of the east, The pride of our great mourning, fair they glowed, Our heroes from all agony released, Speeding to Honor's beautiful abode.

Still eager with their youth's unslaked desire, Leaping the clouds with feet too light to fall, Beneath a many-bannered arch of fire Those glories raced like boys to festival. —Good Housekeeping.

Miss Patterson Goes to Prague

The stern drum beat of duty has been heard by many of our attractive Omaha girls and it is to the fortune of Miss Eugenie Patterson, who enlisted in her country's service, to travel around the globe before she will again see the shores of her homeland.

Miss Patterson will have an ocean voyage of six weeks, going through the Suez canal. It is interesting to note that her intimate friend, Miss Anne Gifford, has recently sailed for Belgrade, where she will do reconstruction work and the two friends will not be a great distance apart.

Government Protects Women Workers from Exploitation as Workers

Federal policy in the employment of women during the war, as revealed in the work of the national war labor board, is outlined in the Monthly Labor Review, which says: "In the many awards made by the board affecting women, it has not generally been necessary to make any specific provision for them beyond the application of the board's principles to the specific case. Women have shared with men in the increase in wages which the board has granted. Very frequently they have received a greater proportionate increase than the men, because the prevailing rate of wages for women has been lower. In certain cases it was necessary to specify that there must be no discrimination against women, but in general it has been sufficient to lay down in general terms the equal pay principle. "In several of the awards special minimum wage provisions have been inserted in respect to women, setting their minimum lower than that of the men. This was done partly to avoid too great a disturbance within the industry, and partly because the women referred to were doing a lower grade of work than any of the men. The minima set, however, were generous and well in advance of the wages of men in many an industry which has not yet come under the jurisdiction of the board." Never put bananas in the refrigerator. They will turn black instead of ripening.
