Land Locked

By Celia Thaxter.

Black lie the hills, swiftly doth daylight flee And catching gleams of daylight's dying smile. Through the dark land for many a changing mile The river runneth softly to the sea. O happy river, could I follow thee!

Have patience—here are flowers and songs of birds. Beauty and fragrance, wealth of sound and sight. All summer's glory thine from morn till night. And life too full of joy for uttered words.

Neither am I ungrateful, but I dream Deliciously how twilight falls to-night. Over the glimmering water, how the light Dies blissfully away until I seem To feel the wind sea-scented on my cheek.

To catch the sound of dusky flapping sail And dip of oars, and voices on the gale. Afar off calling low—my name they speak! O, Earth! thy summer song of joy may soar, Ringing to heaven in triumph. I but crave The sad caressing murmur of the wave That breaks in tender music on the shore.

Beautiful Women Must Have Faultless Coiffures or Seem Untidily Dressed

Luxuriant Tresses Are Not Necessary for a Smart Coiffure, But Those One Has Must Be Expertly Arranged.

Do you mind taking off your hat, at the theater or anywhere else in public? Or do you feel that your "look so much better with your hat on," and prefer to wear it whenever there is the least excuse? If you do, it is fairly certain that you do not give all the attention to your coiffure that you should.

A good many women would like to have prettier hair and more smartly arranged hair, but do not know just how to effect a change for the better in their own tresses. They admire, wistfully, the exquisitely dressed locks of the woman who never minds removing her hat, and they wish they had hair as well kept and as naturally beautiful as hers.

A good many women deny this indignantly; but it is the truth nevertheless. There are very few heads of hair that are so hopeless that a smart coiffure is impossible—if one takes the trouble; but unless hair is naturally beautiful and of good quality, more or less trouble is necessary to keep it in perfect order. This trouble the average, busy woman is unwilling to take.

How much time do you spend on your hair? Many a woman spends substantial sums on dental work; visits a manicure regularly so that her hands are always in dainty condition; and buys creams and cosmetics for her complexion; yet gives so little thought to her hair that an invitation to a big affair is positively worrisome, because of that perfect coiffure which her grand toilette is going to demand, and which she knows she is not going to be able to achieve.

Wise is she whose locks are always in such perfect condition that they take the way they should go on all occasions and cause no special worry or misery at a time when one is already worried enough, trying to look one's very best for a grand occasion.

No longer can any woman protest that her hair is "too scanty to look decent, however she tries to arrange it." The coiffure of the moment does not require a great deal of hair; indeed, long, heavy hair is rather hard to arrange in the modern fashion—there is so much of it that the hairdresser finds difficulty in disposing of the excess quantity. Study all the pictures of evening hairdressings, presented today, and you will see that not one of these three charming coiffures requires long and heavy hair. The secret lies in the quality, not the quantity of the hair.

In the Evening the Hair Is Worth High, in Soft Puffs, but Waves Must Cover the Forehead and Ears.

hairdresser will last a long time in winter, when the head does not perspire and when it is not so apt to be exposed to sea fogs and evening dews as in summer time. A very loose wave—like the wave in the pictures—is more becoming than a tight, crisp march; but you will have to insist on loose wave and stick to it, for the average hairdresser does love to crinkle the hair.

Unless your hair is kept all the time in this clean, soft condition, and is waved and dressed each day in something the manner illustrated, it will not take the lines of the desired coiffure upon occasions, widely separated. You may have it shampooed, waved and "dressed" the day of the party, but though curling irons and cosmetic preparations will force it to take the way it should go for a smart coiffure, the effect will be artificial and rigid and you will not look like yourself. Therefore, keep the hair in proper condition all the time, have it shampooed and waved occasionally; arrange it carefully and becomingly every day—and hairdressing will have no terrors for you when the night of the important "party" comes around.

Twice a month is often enough for a thorough shampoo in most cases, though some hair is so oily and so prone to cling in heavy, dank locks against the head that it must be washed once a week. If your hair is straight and unruly it will pay you to have it marcelled or waved once in a week or ten days. The wave put in by a good

Daughters were born to Mr. and up into tight, hard looking little undulations!

And have the hair waved the day-before-the-day of your important evening engagement—not the same day. By the second day the waves are always softer and more natural looking and adjust themselves better to a graceful arrangement. Some women wind a chiffon scarf lightly over the head, or an old face veil, when going to bed—to keep the wave from flattening out during sleep.

Two of the pictures show a high arrangement of the hair, the ends being made into soft puffs on the crown while the waves at the front are drawn loosely over forehead and ears. The other picture shows the hair wound around the head, revealing its contour; the ends are tucked out of sight at the back, and make the foundation of the coiffure, which is slightly elongated at the crown. The black hair is twisted high and made into a coil or knot on the crown; then the waves at front and sides are drawn entirely over this knot and the ends tucked in, and a few shell or amber pins hold the coiffure in place. These pins are evident in all the pictured coiffures; they help to hold the waves against the head and give the correct silhouette to the hair dressing.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

Look years younger! Use the old time Sage Tea and Sulphur and nobody will know.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you'll get a bottle of "Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one of two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Compound tonight and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.—Adv.
