Attractive for Dancing

By GERTRUDE BERESFORD.

Just how charming and diaphanous an evening gown may be is shown in this girlish model of Nile green chiffon, designed for wear at Palm Beach. The bodice is softly draped over a camisole of thin white silk. The shoulder straps and girdle are of silver ribbon. Silver ribbon also heads the two bands of tucks and are set in the tunic overskirt. The underskirt of chiffon hangs straight and narrow beneath this full overskirt. The graceful sleeves are scarf-like, but are cut like a kimono sleeve. Flitting flatly over the shoulders they fall in graceful folds over the arms. This model will develop beautifully in flesh, pink or orchid chiffon.

More of the Clever Answers in the Bee's "What Is Love?" Contest

No. 203. Real love comes with the first heart throb to the expectant mother, and when the wee bit of life comes to the world, and the young mother takes it in her arms and to her bosom, then it is the full blossom of love.

The years glide by and more and more the fingers clutch the heart and more and more they grow as one.

Young manhood is reached and the mother is called to prove an alibi. She does it before God and man, but alas, she has purged her soul. That is love.

No. 204. "Papa, what is love?" asked a little boy of 10, after seeing the question in The Bee.

"That my boy can be better demonstrated than described," said the father, "come with me."

He led the boy to the village blacksmith and found that worthy being engaged in welding two chains that lay at his feet. Taking a link identical with the rest, he gathered the two ends of the chains together and with it welded them into one.

"Now son," said the father, "do you see the answer to your question?"

"I do," replied the boy. "Love is the connecting link that binds two hearts together."

No. 205. Love is just a cobweb wet with morning dew.

Love is just a fairy spell—invisible to view— A tread—a touch too heavy, and the cobweb is not there, A sigh too long and lo!

The spell has vanished into air! Love is just a morning-glory, doomed at noon to die.

Love is only half a story—told in the passing by; Love is gold so delicate the faintest flame would melt it;

Love is nothing; but God help the man who's never known or felt it!—Author Unknown.

No. 209. Some say love is a light, foolish and slight thing, but it is not; they know not of what they speak.

Love is a yearning, a burning and a lot of heart throbs.

Some cases are just a hug and a kiss, while others leave an impression to the one in love so greatly that it is not easily mended.

If one of the opposite sex meet and there is a smile, a kiss and a tender word said, some call that love. No, that isn't love, because if one person sees another the same in 100 ways and looks they will soon forget the first one.

If you are in doubt whether you like a person, then be sure that sometimes isn't love.

If love is not returned, then trust to God that if that person was mated for you he will come.

"As you all know, everyone was mated for someone."

But the pure and true love is God.

No. 227. Love is a feeling which comes from the very heart and soul. Love is a feeling that can't very well be expressed in words; it can only be expressed by acts of kindness and sympathy; when one loves they will sacrifice their life for the one loved and do all in their power to make them comfortable and happy and take pleasure in so doing. True love is trust, and overlooks all errors and faults. Only possessors of real love know its value, pleasure and happiness; if there were more true love there would be less evil and more Christians today.

No. 233. Love is life. When man was created God, who is Love, "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life" (Bible). Without love life would be simply vegetation. Love is that which binds the three units of the family—father, mother and children—into a perfect triune as complete and inseparable as the cloverleaf or "shamrock." (St. Patrick). We believe in love, but with little of this world's goods. We have stood hand-in-hand and seen fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and children pass to the great beyond, and love lightened and made bearable the pain. In midlife we saw the hot wind dry up the grass and gan life rich in love, but with little of this world's goods. We have stood hand-in-hand and seen fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and children pass to the great beyond, and love lightened and made bearable the pain. In midlife we saw the hot wind dry up the grass and water of the plains, leaving cattle to starve and wiping out the results of our years' toil. We returned to Nebraska and began all over again. In a few years we stood on the bluff and saw the river carry away all our possessions except the brave team, to whose gallant efforts we owe our lives and, the lives of the children and a wagon. Again drouth and a fire left us to begin life over again, yet love made life not only bearable, but happy.

We are nearing the end of the journey, and the end is like the sunset of a summer eve, made so by love. God's love, the love of children and grandchildren and each other. It is the one thing we have on earth we can take with us to heaven.

No. 224. Love? Who can express it? To the human heart it brings supreme joy exaltation and happiness or deepest sorrow and pain. Love is a revelation revealing a world of beautiful things unseen before. Love does not count the cost but gives joyfully, gladly, unreservedly of self; giving to the beloved sympathy, understanding, tenderness, humanity, complete surrender. Love is eternal until death and beyond.

No. 239. Love is an affectionation to please the taste of some unknown feeling within the heart or soul that cannot be expressed by words. It can only be felt by the soul possessor in many different ways you may show by action that others can understand. By word is only a flatter or flirtation.

AWARDS WILL BE ANNOUNCED LATER. So many good answers have been submitted in this contest that we will continue to print them from day to day as space permits and announce awards at the conclusion. In the interval we want to thank all the hundreds of readers who responded for their help in making the contest such a wonderful success.
