U. S. Employment Bureau Needs More Girls

"From Cooks to Chemists" Are Needed, According to Miss Stearns at Court House.

"But woman's work is never done," that is the message that comes to Omaha women from the federal employment service in the court house.

The armistice has not lessened the need of women workers, according to the calls for girls in the books of the employment service.

There is just more of a shake-up in the kind and the salaries of course are more "stable."

"We have more calls for work than we can fill unless we have the co-operation of Omaha women and girls even to a greater degree," said Miss Elizabeth Stearns, who is in the court house.

Miss Kathleen O'Brien, who is head of this work in Omaha, is now in Washington.

"We need stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, domestics, clerks, and even women for temporary places.

Chemists are needed—in that year the service placed five chemists and the recommendations for them have been so excellent that the calls exceed the applicants.

An average of from 300 to 400 have been placed monthly by the service and in spite of the women released since the armistice, there is an unprecedented demand for women workers.

"We co-operate with the visiting nurses, the United Charities, the City Mission, beside the business firms of Omaha and vicinity," said one secretary.

There is absolutely no charge for registration for any position, by the federal service, which is part of the Department of Labor.

Every place is investigated before anyone is sent to fill it. There are standing calls from the largest firms in Omaha which are open to girls and women of certain type during their season.

It will be at this sale that all the superfluous bric-a-brac and other gifts of art may be purchased by the one who wants just these particular bits that are now a burden to their owners.

Do not throw away bread crusts. They make good croutons for soup. Stale bread can be made into griddle cakes. A bread omelet is also good. Stale bread soaked, then mixed with minced left-over beefsteak and one or two eggs, makes a delicious omelet.

Tall Cathedral Candles Shed Soft Glow Over Bridal Party at the Payne-Howland Nuptials Tuesday

Bridegroom's Father as Best Man Lent Charm To Ceremony

Tall cathedral candles shed their soft glow over the banks of ferns and smilax and myriads of roses which transformed the altar of the First Central Congregational church into a bower of beauty Tuesday evening when the marriage of Miss Marjorie Helen Howland to Richard Fuller Payne was solemnized. The Rev. Frank Smith read the marriage lines.

As the first strains of the wedding march sounded the wedding party entered, Miss Margaret Gamble, a charming picture in a gown of Nile green satin, trimmed in sequins, made with a long train. A georgette hat of lavender trimmed with morning glories was worn by this attractive maid of honor and a corsage bouquet of lavender sweet peas completed a striking costume. Mrs. Clarence Sibbensen's gown was of orchid satin with a long court train of silver cloth. A picture hat of lavender georgette was worn and a shower bouquet of lavender sweet peas tied with fluttering ribbons was carried. Mrs. Frank Selby wore a smart gown in the pastel shades and a large hat of lavender georgette crepe. Her shower bouquet was of pink and lavender sweet peas.

The very loveliest bride of the season was Miss Howland in her wedding gown of gleaming satin, the bodice heavily embroidered in pearls and brilliants. The long court train was caught with bow knots of tulle and rose buds and from a tiny Directoire cap the long, filmy veil hung to the hem of the gown. Fragrant lillies of the valley and orchids formed a shower bouquet of rare beauty.

An unusual and beautiful touch to the ceremony was given by the presence of the bridegroom's father, Mr. George H. Payne, who served as best man.

The Howland home was beautifully decorated for the reception which followed the ceremony. Tall white pillars holding the baskets of Rus-

Heart Beats

By A. K.

No more! No more! The photograph on the mantelpiece Of her soldier sweetheart Recalls the thrills And the heartbeats And charged-anticipation Of by-gone days. No more will she Hear those Footsteps Coming up the walk In the early evening. No more will she Hear those Endearing speeches No more bouquets And ribbon-tied Boxes of candy. The telephone Shall be silent His car And his liveried Driver Will be seen No more Standing outside The door. Sweet confidences! Ah, forever gone. Love's young dream Has suffered the Shock Life now holds But a dreary blank Sprinkled with Suffering and sorrow Tears fill her Eyes And a choking sob Escapes From the pent up Emotion As she gazes Into eyes Of the man Whose promise to be True meant sunshine and Heaven to her But yesterday. It's all over Now But the suffering. She turns And walks slowly To the seclusion Of her boudoir And soliloquizes On what might Have been had she not Married him last night. SELAH!

Commonlaw Wife Wants Divorce from Husband "Untrue to His Vows"

Marie Holocka filed suit in district court, asking that she be divorced from her common-law husband, Fred Holocka. On June 1, 1916, she says, they entered into a common-law marriage and lived as husband and wife until January 5, 1919.

She charges that he "was untrue to his marriage vows" and on numerous occasions has sought the company of other women. She says she has frequently tried to persuade the defendant to take out a marriage license but that he has refused.

Once he became so angry, she says, when she called in a doctor to see their sick child that he cursed and slapped her. She asks the custody of their child.

The Young Old Woman fountain of youth is an eternal and though eager adventure sought it through the centuries is still unfound. No one, however, has sought the fountain of not woman, at any rate. Most women shudder at the thought of it. But Evelyn Selbie does share in the general horror of sex—at least not professionally, has assumed more "old woman" than any other actress of her and enjoys impersonating the various types that are included under the general heading.

The fact that a young woman constantly portrays these roles of older women will be surprising to most photoplay goers in view of the fact that there are a great many character women to be had whose age and appearance would require no make-up for such parts. In many cases an older woman would be selected as a matter of course, but, oftentimes, the photoplay demands a strenuous action from its grandmothers as it does from its debutantes, and, in such instances, a younger actress is of necessity cast in the role.

Expert make-up is required, but Evelyn Selbie's long experience, has taught her every phase of this art and the various ruses she employs to disguise her youth are impervious. The demand for character women of her ability is so great that she was called from San Francisco to support Marie Walcamp in the serial "The Red Glove," in which she portrays the role of Tia Juana, the weird crone in whom the mystery of the story centers.

Armour and Company NOT in the Retail Grocery Business

CERTAIN jobbing salesmen are circulating reports to the effect that Armour and Company control certain retail grocery stores or are planning to enter into the retail grocery business.

These reports are utterly and absolutely false. We desire to brand them as such once and for all. Armour and Company do not control any retail grocery stores wholly or in part. Neither have we any affiliation or connection in any way whatsoever with any owners of any retail grocery stores. Armour and Company have no intention of engaging in the retail grocery business.

Armour and Company distribute and sell a very limited number of food lines not directly produced from livestock. This is only the result of natural evolution. This same distributive system enables us to carry staple foods to the people of this country with greater efficiency and at a cost that is low commensurate with the service. If our facilities are such that we have been able to serve the public more economically and efficiently than our competitors, then it is the retailer and consumer who benefit.
