Home at Last By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE

The dotted cays,
With their little trees,
Lie all about on the crystal floor;
Nothing but beauty—
Far off is duty,
Far off the folk of the busy shore.

The mangroves stride
In the colored tide,
With leafy crests that will soon be isles;
And all is lonely—
White sea sand only,
Angel pure for untrodden miles.

In sunny bays The young shark plays.

Among the ripples and nets of light,
And the conch shell crawls

Through the glimmering halls

The coral builds for the Infinite.

And every gem
In His diadem,
n flaming topaz to moon-hushed pearl, Glitters and glances

In swaying dances waters adream like the eyes of a girl

The sea and the stars, And the ghostly bars the shoals all bright 'neath the feet of the moon, The night that glistens. And stops and listens
To the half-heard beat of an endless tune

Griends although we have never met.
Miss Fairfax, I have two serious questions to lay before your eyes and two questions which in my mind are out of the ordinary, and which you can't print my letter, please print the answer. Now for business. The first question is: Two years ago became acquainted with a young farmer, 23 years of age now, and our correspondence turned to what s more supreme. One year ago he entered the service and now he is in France. I hear from him often. I admire him im-Well, that part is O. K., but here is the other: My brother, who is still in the service and who two years ago became a great pal of a wireless operator (a man, too) from New York, while being stationed at Manila, P. I., gave this said New York chap permission to write to me, after he had spied my photo in my brother's rooms. For one year we have corresponded and in that time have become the best of friends. He is a well-educated and refined gentleman, while the other toiling, poor, care-free and motherless boy. I admire them both and don't care for one any more than the other, but I expect them both real soon and please, Beatrice, what shall I do? I am trusting my confidence in ou, my dear adviser, so please don't lisappoint me. Hoping to see my little missive in print soon, as I am anxious as can be and very restless, indeed! Thanking you, Miss Fairfax, in advance, a thousand times. "LITTLE DIMPLES."

Wait until you have seen them both. The overseas trip may have changed the first man. The secand may be so different from his letters that you wouldn't care for him at all. Love and marriage are too serious to be triled with and therefore I can only suggest that you wait until you have seen them both again. One will stand way ahead of the other in personality.

S. D. and V. T .- Both-I don't think that your friends would tell you you were good looking if you vere not, but I also think that they tell many others the same thing As long as you believe there are others beside who have a claim to Venus I don't see that you should object. Let your mother judge about the car riding. If you wish to dance with some boy more than twice, I see no reason why you should not do so, especially when you came with him. If this boy wants to take you home from a dance, certainly should take you. You'll not sorry if you insist on this. I don't see why one should not wear georgette waists on the street. I like Worried Miss Twenty-You would be doing yourself and your re-turned soldier man a far greatwrong in not marrying him than in asking him to make his home separate from his mother.
