Does arbitrate the event, my nature is
That I incline to hope rather than fear.

Is It Any Wonder Little Girls Hitch Their Chariots to Theatricals and Stars

This is just what is making day dreams and air castles of luxurious days of stardom in the minds of would-be dancers; this is what is making hundreds of little girls whose chariots have been hitched to the star of theatricals sigh and leave their homes! This is what makes monotonous-wearied men and women look up from their languor and breathe in the luxury, the splendor and reckless elegance of this eastern setting! "The Red Lantern," with Mile. Alla Nazimova of the gripping, eastern "dragon" charm and panther-like motions, is this picture. She brooks no imitation for every inch of the stage property is as real as the hands of the actual Chinamen could make; the scenes are painted by the brushes of true Chinese painters and in the cast appear more than 1,000 members of California's Chinese Chinamen from Chinky-Chintown. The priceless, rich embroideries, rugs and settings were borrowed from California's oldest and truest Chinese residents. No wonder its magic, its allurements, its grandeur and oriental atmosphere serve as a magnet to draw all the little kiddies with a taste for dance, a love of a dragon and a sense for a spangle in its very wake.

Let me give you a suggestion or two. For one thing, don't let too great a difference in interests arise between you and your husband. Love don't live without companionship. I'll admit that. And companionship demands that as many of your interests as possible be shared.

By this I mean: Don't be domestic to the exclusion of everything else. Does this horrify you? Have you even taught that a woman can't be too domestic, that the more time she spends in cooking for her man, in sewing and in cleaning for him, the better wife she is?

And yet you must have noticed that women who do spend all their time and strength in domestic duty, aren't often objects of romantic love to their husbands, and have themselves usually lost sight of what love is.

I don't mean that if you assume the responsibility of a household you oughtn't to do the job well. Disorderly houses and bad meals are a disgrace always, from the point of view of any sane person. But if you want to keep your love alive, don't let your housework consume you utterly. Resist that calamity.

And be sure that you reserve free energy to help your husband escape the danger, which naturally is that of being consumed by business.

Persuade him to go to the country with you on Sundays. It will be the nicest thing you both can do, even if it involves sacrifice. It will keep you young and fresh, and make you companions to each other—and keep love alive.

Do you get the idea? Don't withdraw into a world of saucers and spoons whence you can only signal to husband, who for his part, becomes more and more tightly locked up in a world of bookkeeping or salesmanship. It isn't necessary. And the result will be unhappy. It will mean that Sunday you will find that you two, who were once each other's universe, will find that you can't talk to each other interestingly for five minutes. And the honeymoon will indeed seem very far behind.

Will Parenthood Do It?

Some young wife will ask me why it is necessary for married lovers to make a point of reading books together and talking walks together when sooner or later they will share the most absorbing interest that it is possible to have, which is babies.

It is true that babies are the most wonderful bond conceivable. Yet even babies aren't enough to keep love alive in the honeymoon sense. As a matter of fact, you'll have to be on your guard not to be too parental—not to lose sight of each

Making the Honeymoon Last Is a Job for Clever Souls Who Think Ahead as They Think in the Past

The Man Who Regards His Wife as a Possession and Having Secured Her He Immediately Begins To Be Dictatorial and Cripples Poor Little Love Forever.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Perhaps you were married a month ago.

It may be that you were fortunate enough to take a short journey together, and since then you and your husband have been busy installing yourselves in that flat you have been planning so absorbedly for a year or so.

In any case you two young lovers have been able to be together, and alone for the first time in your lives, and you haven't missed the rest of the world a bit.

You have continually reminded each other of your happiness, and you have asked each other, rather too often, perhaps, "Shall we ever be as happy again?"

That is to say, you have distrusted your happiness even at its height; you've had more than a fear, you've had almost a dark certainty, that it couldn't possibly last.

It's been wonderful, this honeymoon. It would really have been joy without a flaw—if you could only have believed in it. But all your life you've heard the world say that honeymoons don't last, that the beautifully bright flame of love yields shortly to the ashes of dullness and indifference, and that all the rest of life amounts to not much more than a hard daily struggle with practical facts and conditions.

It's no wonder you've believed this, the repetition has been so constant. It's no wonder that you've believed that every pair of lovers in the world must succumb to the superstition that love can last but a month.

A Dark View of Life.

A brief honeymoon of bliss—then a long lifetime of dogged endurance. It's a dreary program, isn't it? And when you recall the extent to which most of us have secretly believed in it, you wonder that love has kept its good name and that anybody has been willing to marry.

It is time, I think, that we looked into the honeymoon superstition. It is time that lovers learned how to prolong their love, instead of sacrificing it to a bogey of pessimism.

Why shouldn't honeymoon happiness last?

We have to admit that there are cases where it can't. But these are mostly cases where the lovers are unworthy of the greatness of love.

Cases where a man regards a wife as a possession, and having secured her, immediately begins to be dictatorial, and perhaps a little brutal, so that love becomes crippled forever.

Or cases where a woman is selfish and spoiled, and exacting so that love grows changed, and tongue-tied. Or cases where some unpleasant personal habit, like greediness or slovenliness, makes love ashamed of itself.

But, after all, it's not of these cases that we are speaking.

Truly loving and love-worthy lovers should be able to keep their love alive, even though every cynic in the world shall tell them that marriage is the end of love.

And you who have been married a month, have you begun to guess how it may be done?

How Keep Love Alive.

Let me give you a suggestion or two. For one thing, don't let too great a difference in interests arise between you and your husband. Love don't live without companionship. I'll admit that. And companionship demands that as many of your interests as possible be shared.

By this I mean: Don't be domestic to the exclusion of everything else. Does this horrify you? Have you even taught that a woman can't be too domestic, that the more time she spends in cooking for her man, in sewing and in cleaning for him, the better wife she is?

And yet you must have noticed that women who do spend all their time and strength in domestic duty, aren't often objects of romantic love to their husbands, and have themselves usually lost sight of what love is.

I don't mean that if you assume the responsibility of a household you oughtn't to do the job well. Disorderly houses and bad meals are a disgrace always, from the point of view of any sane person. But if you want to keep your love alive, don't let your housework consume you utterly. Resist that calamity.

And be sure that you reserve free energy to help your husband escape the danger, which naturally is that of being consumed by business.

Persuade him to go to the country with you on Sundays. It will be the nicest thing you both can do, even if it involves sacrifice. It will keep you young and fresh, and make you companions to each other—and keep love alive.

Do you get the idea? Don't withdraw into a world of saucers and spoons whence you can only signal to husband, who for his part, becomes more and more tightly locked up in a world of bookkeeping or salesmanship. It isn't necessary. And the result will be unhappy. It will mean that Sunday you will find that you two, who were once each other's universe, will find that you can't talk to each other interestingly for five minutes. And the honeymoon will indeed seem very far behind.

Will Parenthood Do It?

Some young wife will ask me why it is necessary for married lovers to make a point of reading books together and talking walks together when sooner or later they will share the most absorbing interest that it is possible to have, which is babies.

It is true that babies are the most wonderful bond conceivable. Yet even babies aren't enough to keep love alive in the honeymoon sense. As a matter of fact, you'll have to be on your guard not to be too parental—not to lose sight of each others individualities in your absorption in the children.

If you and your husband wish to remain lovers always—and you know that at present that's your dearest hope—don't let your very personal affections fade away in the unselfish excitement of becoming "father" and "mother." Motherhood is a marvelous thing, and so is fatherhood, in a lesser degree. But see if you can't experience them to the utmost and still hold fast to that love-like relation that is so precious to you now.

You can do it if you sincerely want to. It's been done before, in spite of what everybody has told you, and done triumphantly.

If your love is big and real, and you respect it and can nourish it sufficiently, it can live as long as you do.

See if you can't make your honeymoon last a lifetime.

When the Circus Came.

The circus advance agent was in a reminiscent mood.

"It beats all," he said, "what notions some people entertain about men in my line."

"I suppose so," said the shoe salesman.

"A button came off my coat the other day and I went into a tailor shop to have it sewed on."

"Naturally."

"When the work was done I asked the tailor what was the expense."

"How much was it?"

"He said: 'Oh, that's all right; I couldn't think of charging you for a little thing like that. You are a show fellow, aren't you?'"

"Yes, I said."

"Oh, well," he said, "you can just slip me a couple of passes and it will be all right."

"Can you beat it? Two dollars for sewing on a button is all he wanted!"—Youngstown Telegram.

JUST THINK OF

CADOMENE

When You Find You Are Losing Out in the Game of Life.

Vorn-out, Nervous Men and Weak, Bloodless, Anemic Women Have Found New Strength and Vigor in Taking Cadomene Tablets.

A well-known writer on physical culture says: "You cannot run a high powered engine without fuel. You cannot get much speed without plenty of steam. You cannot get up much steam without plenty of coal and a perfect working furnace (body). Similarly in your own case, the internal 'works' must be sound and working properly."

That tired feeling—do you know what it means? It means that digestion and nutrition are lacking. It means that your blood and nerves are impoverished. It means that slow but sure decline in your vitality will surely ensue and real sickness will overtake you unless you bestir yourself in overcoming the weakness of the organs responsible.

In reality it expresses logical facts. Cadomene Tablets, the favorite prescription of a great physician, are made, and sold by druggists for people who need help for nature's forces, owing to ignorance, neglect or dissipation of one kind or another. Every package is guaranteed to please or money back.

American School Boys About to Execute Big Furniture Order

American school boys are about to execute probably one of the biggest furniture orders ever placed—30,000 chairs and 10,000 tables. Manufacturing this furniture in school and community manual training shops throughout the United States the members of the Junior Red Cross will present it, through the American Red Cross, to the refugees of northern France. These people are pouring back to their devastated homes at a rate that makes the housing problem involved one of the hardest French government and the relief agencies have to solve.

According to the program laid down about 100,000 school boy carpenters will participate in the big job and it is expected that 15,000 families in France will receive one or more pieces of furniture as the result. With each chair and table will go a message of greeting from the Junior Red Cross containing an address card that will enable the recipients to acknowledge the gift.

The necessity for supplying the refugees with furniture arises from the fact that many of them are penniless, with which to buy furnishings, while such as have funds cannot be supplied in France because of the lack of materials and the destruction of the means of manufacture.

An organization has been formed in Des Moines to build in that city an up-to-date hotel for the accommodation of working women.

Turn Hair Dark With Sage Tea

Grandma kept her locks dark, glossy and youthful with a simple mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandma's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is one of the great advantages.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.—Adv.

The Victory Liberty Loan

We Started a Job in April 1917
Now We Must Finish It.

A man said to us:

"I don't care if the loan is a failure."

We told him:

"Yes, you do!"

"If the Victory Loan fails, there is just one alternative.

"That is for the Government to raise the needed amount of money by doubling or tripling the present rate of taxation.

"It's a cinch the Government has to have the money.

"To raise the money by taxation would affect every individual in the United States, big or little.

"The bulk of the direct taxes, of course, would fall upon the big interests—but if the big interests and employers in general were forced to pay any larger rate than they are now paying, they would necessarily have to retrench in every manner possible in order to meet their obligations, and material reductions in wages and increased costs of all articles purchased would follow."
