CITY PLANNING BOARD MUST GET DOWN TO EARTH

Mayor Criticizes Plan for Employing St. Louis Man in Advisory Capacity at $3,000 Year.

"Unless this city planning department comes down to earth, they won't get a cent for next year," said Mayor Smith in city council committee of the whole yesterday afternoon.

The mayor referred particularly to the recent employment of Harland Bartholomew, of the St. Louis city planning commission, to serve in an advisory capacity for the Omaha city planning commission at an agreed compensation of $3,000. Mr. Bartholomew was paid $300 for January, $250 for February and $250 for March.

"The engagement of Mr. Bartholomew was approved by the city planning commission," explained City Commissioner Towl. "This St. Louis expert is here twice a month for two or three days at a time and he is giving expert services in zoning work and other phases of city planning. Members of the city planning board are giving their services without pay and I take it that they knew what they were doing when they engaged Mr. Bartholomew. Personally I am satisfied that the city is receiving value for money paid in this instance."
