"The Rose Fairy" Mrs. Learned's New Masque

Beautiful Thought Runs Through the New Masque. Read at Players' Club.

Mrs. Myron Learned, whose beautiful outdoor masque, "The Spirit of Walden Wood," was produced in Omaha as a war benefit two seasons ago and whose more recent work, "Voices of the Dunes," was presented in Chicago for the spring festival of the Prairie club with great success, later being presented in moving pictures, has written another masque entitled, "The Rose Fairy." At the last weekly meeting of the Players' club held at the home of Miss Arabella Kimball the masque was read by Miss Kimball and elicited enthusiastic admiration and many congratulations for the writer.

Miss Kimball gave the reading with skill and brought out with dramatic emphasis the story of the masque which is an appeal of the woodland creatures to the "Hunter" to spare the living things in the forest.

Pan summons all the creatures of the wood—nymphs, birds, rabbits, squirrels and dandelions—to a party in the forest for the Rose Fairy and her Birthday Fairies. As they are about to enjoy themselves the hunter comes on his horse heralded by a blast from his horn, and there is dire confusion and fear. At last they are able to rid themselves of the hunter, after telling him what they think of him. He is led away by the water nymph, "Syrinx," to learn better things. The birthday frolic of the Rose Fairy comes off successfully. In bringing harmony at last to the trees the creatures and fairies are able to see "Joy of the Wood," for whom they have been seeking. He comes suddenly upon the festival. The Rose Fairy tries to persuade him to go back to the town with her and the little boy and the little girl. She says: "And wilt thou walk with us a space Toward the city of my dream? Where folk so badly need thy voice To still the storm of their unrest? Joy of the Wood replies: "My home is in the quiet paths That reach from grassy banks and glades. The forest is my leafy shrine To search where'er I find a star."

I light when least expected, to fire evanescent than the breeze I'll go with thee a little space But I must soon return to them (Indicating the wood creatures) They know me when the shades are still, And happiness is in the wood.

Envelope Gumming advertisement. The best envelope gum is made out of Tapioca flour. Most of the Tapioca flour used for this purpose comes from Java. During the war Tapioca flour became very scarce and hard to get in this country and the price went up over 500 per cent. Notwithstanding this fact we continued to use Tapioca flour gum all through the war, as we considered that our customers were entitled to the best there was, and so we did not purchase any of the cheap substitutes which came on the market when the price of the good went up. The first fresh lot of Tapioca flour to come from Java since the war is now arriving in this country and we have an order in already for some of it. Tapioca flour gum has splendid adhesive qualities, and is not only perfectly sanitary and healthful, but is even palatable. If you want envelopes that stick, send us the order.
