Still seems it strange, that thou shouldst live forever?
Is it less strange, that thou shouldst live at all?
This is a miracle, and that no more.

Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Salt and Pepper—You need seasoning, spite of the nom de plume. It is to be regretted that your mothers will not answer your questions, because, more than anything else, you need a mother's advice. If you placed no greater significance to engagement rings than is indicated by the fact that you gave them to other young men, I do not blame your fiancé for breaking the engagements. You ask for names of young men who might care to correspond with you. The kind of correspondence you seek is not the kind I care to encourage.

Music Teacher.

Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: Will appreciate it if I may trouble you for some information. Am almost a stranger in Omaha and would wish the name and address of a gentleman instructor of piano, who is first-class, and also of a vocal teacher for alto, contralto and soprano. These instructors must be first-class. Please answer through The Bee. Have been reading your columns with interest.

He Kissed Another Woman.

Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I am a reader of your "Advice to the Lovelorn" and think you give some pretty good advice. I have a little question to ask you. I expect some folks think it silly, but when I think of it it gets on my nerves. My husband was in a large town not long ago and got acquainted with some folks and went to parties, which I wouldn't mind if he acted like a gentleman. But he tells me of kissing one of the women. Now, Miss Fairfax, do you think that is right for a married man to do when he has a true wife and little babe at home?

Of course your husband should not kiss another woman. The fact that he has told you of it and laughs about it, indicates a spirit of badinage. Perhaps it was an act of gallantry before a crowd? This would not excuse him, but a knowledge of his attitude and the circumstances of the folly might make it possible for you to view the act in such a way as to find it forgivable this time. Your husband should know that his conduct has caused you unhappiness, and if he values your peace of mind as he should, he will not only forego a repetition of the offense, but will cease teasing you about the present incident. Once the matter is dismissed between you, it should be entirely forgotten and not brought up again and again to cause unhappiness anew. If your husband's act was malicious, deceptive, or deliberately inconsiderate of you, the case is then more serious, and calls for a different reply than the above.

Sheer Evening Gowns

By GERTRUDE BERESFORD.

The ideal summer evening gown is made of cream lace and flesh pink Georgette crepe. A surprise bodice of pink Georgette is laid over a camisole lining of pink charmeuse. Over this runs cream lace. Georgette makes the long sleeves, which are slashed to show the arm. A band of lace insertion edges the sleeves. The underskirt is made of Georgette crepe, over which is draped an overskirt and train of lace. The girdle of this picturesque gown is flesh pink satin ribbon. A knot of narrow silver ribbon holds the lace of the bodice back and front. The dainty sheerness of this gown and its exquisite coloring combine to produce a very charming costume.

Heart Beats

By A. K.

When father Met the family He had a big surprise He learned that Dot, Was a beautiful girl And that James Had great talent And modeled in clay He had never known That little Tom Could act Like a Hackett Or Skinner, Baby Ruth had Big tears in her eyes When father Came near her crib For she didn't know That great big man From a robber or Robin Hood. It happened quite By accident That father stayed At home, For he was a busy man Who couldn't "hang Around the house" And still bring in The cash. Business called him Here and there And the clubmen Were his friends. His office too Took hours of time So home grew farther From father each day Except as a burden And bore. But this lucky night When he stayed at home Dot sang and she played And recited with poise. His eyes grew bright, And his chest grew large And he thought he had Found a prize. He decided right there He would take her out And present her to His friends. Mother called James From his book and His room, To exhibit his work in clay. "A sculptor," bragged father, "And this is my son! Well, I'll see what can Be done with a talent Like this. The world needs such Sons as James." From the serious turn To laughter and tears Dad turned to Little Tom Who danced his Weird original dance And acted the Vicious Hun. He "died" from a shot And "died" from a stab And "died" from The awful trench gas, Until father declared, "That a child who Could "die" in So many different ways Should be given a Chance to "die" for The world and especially For gay old Broadway. The clubs see father's Face no more And business goes on Just the same as before. The "kids" have a chance To sing and dance with her and mother At home. By Ruth laughs, For she knows her dad And waits for his Friendly "hello." The whole world seems brighter And family cares lighter, Since father, One night Met his family.

Telephone Equipment Is Still Very High

When the war started we had surplus cable facilities, telephone instruments, central office equipment and other necessities, because it was our policy to prepare ahead for future requirements.

At the request of the government, the telephone companies during the war conserved labor and materials and extended their property only to meet war needs.

When our surplus facilities were used up, we crowded our equipment to do more than it was intended to do to tide over the war period.

Our plant stood the strain of limited repairs during the war, but much of it must now be replaced at higher material prices and at higher labor costs.

Indications are that the high scale of wages and equipment prices will be generally maintained for a considerable period.

This means that for many years it will no doubt cost much more to furnish telephone service than it did before the present high level of wages and equipment costs was established.

Old-fashioned plumbing fixtures with their uncleanable waste pipes are a constant menace to the health of your entire household. Probably you've already realized this and decided that some day you'd replace them with modern sanitary equipment.

But "some day" ought to be before that antiquated, unsanitary plumbing plays havoc in your home. "Some day" ought to be TODAY.

Come in, see these fixtures and learn how little their installation and resulting health insurance costs.
