HEROES OF WAR RETURNING TO SCENE OF PEACE

Nebraskans Recount Thrilling Incidents in Connection With Blood Stained Fields of France.

Battle scarred, dusty, travel-stained war veterans, the 355 infantry, Nebraska's "fighting farmers," of the "middlewest," 89th division, arrived in Omaha at 10:05 o'clock yesterday morning.

Heroes of battle after battle, skirmish after skirmish, attack after attack, without so much as a rest during their 98 days on the battle front in Toul, St. Mihiel and the Argonne, these veterans returned modestly denying their fame.

No Individual Stars.

"We haven't any stars," Major T. R. Campbell, second in command of the regiment, said when asked for names of a few who had garnered exceptional achievements at the front. "They are fighters—just 'fighting farmers'—and we are proud of them."

Such is the commanding officer's tribute to his men—men who had won decoration after decoration who time on time had risked their lives in battle going so far as to refuse in three instances to evacuate the line in critical moments when relief was waiting.

"I might point to the record of Capt. Neville C. Fischer of St. Louis," the colonel continued. "At the attack before Bois de Bethanville, Captain Fischer, then in command of the second battalion, found himself facing a wood strongly fortified by the enemy possession of which was vital to the American advance planned for the folowing day.

"Without assistance from headquarters and without so much as a map of the territory in question, Captain Fischer rallied his weakened forces and facing a smothering gas barrage of the enemy charged the hill. He carried the hill though captured.

"Later at Saarbaugh, Germany, we learned from German officers that he had died in a German hospital from wounds received in the attack. The story remains as one of the regiment's traditions of valor."

First Death at Toul.

Company M, Third battalion, held the divisional standard for excellence in military dicipline during the division's stay overseas.

Lee Hampton of Lincoln, a private, relates the story of the first deaths by shell fire in the brigade.

"A large shell burst in the center of a squad in the advance on Flirey in the Toul sector. Ten men were killed instantly and two wounded. I and my buddie were the only ones to come away alive."

Company I reports greatest casualties.

Gas Armistice Day.

Sneezing gas and a lone shell was the last thing the Germans sent over on the morning the armistice was signed. Corp. E. Engers of Texas, recently a Nebraska boy, tells the story.

"We had safely crossed the Meuse and our advance patrols had come in contact with German outpost before Stenay and Pouilly on the German side of the river. Marines of the Fifth regiment, Second division, were operating to the north in laisson with the 89th boys.

Resting on Ground

"Our battalion, the Third, was lined up resting in line of combat on the ground before Pouilly. We had made preparations for a grand attack and were about to carry it out.

"All of a sudden there was an intense silence.

"Then after a few minutes—it must have been 5 minutes to 11 o'clock, the hour the armistice took effect—a large shell burst 100 yards from where my squad lay in a shell hole. A singe of sneezing gas floated across the ravine.

Germans Dance On Hill.

"The next thing I knew soldiers all about were standing up and yelling and raising their hands. The word had been passed. We could see a few Germans having a dance on the hillside not far away. One thing—we were disappointed in not being able to take that town. It was ours and we should of had it."

So the 89th record ended.

To the French it is known as the "galloping eighty-ninth," but to the folks back home the division is simply the "fighting farmers" and always will be. Soldiers on the train this morning said they were in entire accord with the title.

Wright Real Fighter.

Another story by the colonel is told of the division's commander, Gen. William M. Wright. General Wright assumed command in the place of Brigadier General Winn, who had brought the troops across the Atlantic and stayed with them during their entire fighting period on the battle fronts at Toul, St. Mihiel and the Argonne.

In the attack in the Argonne in the Bois de Bathanville sector, the general had orders to await relief. The general is quoted as sending to the rear the message:

"Tell 'em we're doing all right. These boys are taking this fight stuff first rate. Let 'em alone."

General Wright, more than any other commander, gained the love of his men. He was one of the few generals on the battle front who forever was "sticking his nose in a trench" or an outpost. "He had to be censured now and then or the division would have lost a commander," Major Campbell said.

Hooper Boy Cited.

Private Henry Goettsche of Hooper, Neb., is perhaps the best loved of all comrades in the regiment. He is a member of Company L.

On the night of November 10 the Meuse was crossed a little south of Stenay on the American side of the river. A detail of six men under Lieutenant Yardmouth was dispatched across the river as a patrol to meet and anticipate any German counter move.

Rescues Commander.

It was a cold night and the water was icy cold. The detail to a man jumped into the river with full battle equipment on and attempted the swim. Lieutenant Yardmouth lost strength in the swift current a little more than half way across and had it not been for the powerful arms of Private Goettsche would have gone down.

The entire detail reached the opposite bank without mishap and started at once on a searcch for the German positions. A large German patrol was met and overcome. Several Germans were killed and more than 30 prisoners taken while a strong attacking point on the town of Stenay was obtained.

For this Goettsche was mentioned in orders, later cited and is now awaiting decoration.

Wagoner Alfred E. Simpson, of Omaha has an interesting ring made made from a French two franc piece that he wouldn't part with for all the money in the United States. His buddy, Jack Garrett, of Arizona, also a wagoner gave it to him on his death stand when a large shell fell amidst the supply wagon train on the way to the Argonne front near Beney, September 15.

TAFT TO SPEAK AT JEWISH MASS MEETING SUNDAY

Archbishop Harty and Other Prominent Leaders to Take Part In Protest at Auditorium.

A big mass meeting under the auspices of the Jewish people of Omaha to protest against the massacres of their co-religionists in Poland, Galicia and Roumania, will be held Sunday afternoon in the municipal Auditorium at 2 o'clock.

Most Reverend Archbishop J. J. Harty, bishop of Omaha, will open the meeting with prayer. There will be addresses by Rev. Frank G. Smith, pastor of Central Congregational church, by Rabbi Frederick Cohn of Temple Israel, and ex-President William H. Taft, who has spoken at similar meetings at Cincinnati and Boston, will address the large gathering of Jews and non-Jews who are expected to be present. Mayor Ed P. Smith will speak in behalf of the city and Cantor Jacob Fleisher will intone the memorial prayer, "God Full of Mercy."

Resolutions of protest to be forwarded to President Wilson and the peace conference will be drafted by a committee consisting of Morris Levy, Dr. Philip Sher, W. L. Holzman, Rev. E. Fleishman, Lee Rosenthal, Sol Brodkey, C. S. Elgutter, J. J. Friedman, Harry A. Wolf, N. Alperth. Harry Lapidus will read the resolutions. Rabbi Morris Taxon will deliver the concluding prayer and benediction. Henry Monsky will act as chairman of the meeting. Miss Cecilia Feiler will lead in the singing of "America."

The speakers of the afternoon will depict conditions as they actually are in Poland and other countries of southeastern Europe.

At a similar meeting held last week at Madison Square Garden, New York, fully 400,000 people were turned away after the vast auditorium was filled to capacity, so that overflow meetings were held in the streets. At that meeting Charles Evans Hughes, former justice of the United States supreme court spoke as follows:

"When I heard these tales of terrible wrongs and suffering in Poland they seemed to me well nigh incredible. I asked to have an opportunity of looking at the report, at the authenticated statements that had been received which could give support to the rumors that had reached us. It seems that all these accounts of robbery and murder and pillage of the defilement of sacred places, and of rape are true. I have learned from those in whose word I have the utmost confidence that insofar as anything can be known in advance of the careful investigation that should speedily be had these sad reports are well authenticated and must be accepted."

GAY THRONGS GO TO AMUSEMENT PARKS OF CITY

Managers Smile as Gates Click, Recording Coin Dropped by Those Out on Pleasure Quest.

Omaha's amusement parks were taxed to capacity to accommodate the crowds that thronged the gates of all three during the afternoon and evening of Memorial day. The long faces of managers, gazing at the morning showers, were wreathed in smiles as the sun came out and with it the thousands of people bent on entertainment.

Wearers of insignias of the Civil, the Spanish-American and the world wars were admitted free to Krug park. Nearly 1,000 veterans were present in uniform. In the afternoon Judge Lee Estelle was the speaker and a Civil war veterans' quartet entertained the crowd. Record attendance for both this and last year was recorded.

Lakeview park held a home coming day of its own, many familiar faces of previous years being seen on the grounds. The lake proved irresistable to many and boating parties were out all day.

The bathing beach at Lake Manawa opened yesterday, for the first time this year. Hundreds of people from Omaha, Council Bluffs and vicinity took their first plunge of the season.

Arthur Smith's band gave a program of patriotic music.

Shady Grove picnic park, adjoining Manawa park and free at all times to picnic parties, was a popular place, scores of large and small picnics being held.

Omaha! We're Proud of You

We publicly stated from the stage, and also in our ads that would play to more people than any picture ever did in Omaha.

Mary Pickford IN Daddy Longlegs

Despite the first hot weather, which always means decreased theater attendance, we can truthfully say (and back up by affidavit, if necessary) that this picture played to more people in one week in Omaha than any other ever did.

Now, do you want to know why we're so proud of you? It's because we predicted in advance that the people of this city preferred a good, clean, wholesome little comedy-love story of this caliber to all the racy, sensational, sex or nude pictures that could be booked. We don't want any reader to get the impression that we are referring to any picture in particular, or that the majority of pictures produced today are of the caliber stated above, but when the producers see features like "Daddy Longlegs" sweeping the country by storm from coast to coast, it's only a natural conclusion that more of these kind of stories will be forthcoming, because the producers simply try to give the public what they believe it wants.

We didn't put out a very big advertising campaign behind "Daddy Longlegs," we simply told you that to our minds "It was the best picture of the year," and you took our word and came and saw.

Nor do we claim that everyone who saw this picture was of the same opinion as ourselves, but WE DO CLAIM THE MAJORITY OF OUR PATRONS WERE OF THIS SAME IMPRESSION, BECAUSE BUSINESS HAS INCREASED EVERY DAY.

In conclusion, we want to publicly thank the fond mothers and beaming fathers of the hundreds of smiling baby beauties who graced our baby contest this week, and to tell them confidentially that we don't think the prizes were awarded fairly—we believe every little girlie and every little man should have won first prize, because never have we beheld such a glittering array of feminine and masculine juvenile loveliness as our baby contestants. We also want to thank the Brandeis Stores for the wonderful co-operation they gave us in this contest; the newspapers for the amount of publicity; Photographer Skoglund for the beautiful photos he so painstakingly took, and the good people of Omaha for the way they applauded, until the palms of their hands burned trying to pick the winners.

Today at 3 p. m. the final contest takes place—that of all the prize-winning babies for the silver loving cup, while today winds up the most successful week this theater has ever had, and begins our second year.
