

TAILORS STRIKE TO ENFORCE WAGE DEMANDS

Work in Practically All Establishments at Standstill; Ask $30 a Week and Better Conditions.

After conferring for two days, more than 200 tailors have voted a strike to enforce their demands. Practically all work in every tailoring establishment is at a standstill as the result of the action. The men conferred all day Monday, first at the Labor temple and in the evening at the Swedish auditorium. They were in session from 10 o'clock in the morning to 5 in the afternoon at the Labor temple Tuesday.

The men demand a wage scale of $30 a week, the elimination of all piece work and improved working conditions.

According to A. S. Glasman, international organizer for the tailors' union, eight of the principal firms affected have agreed to the demands made by their employees. Many other firms have made various proposals to the union and the meetings are being held to discuss them.

Policeman Prefers to Resign Than Answer Charge Before Council

Foster F. Burchard, policeman, resigned rather than face charges before the city council. The charges had been set for hearing yesterday, but the resignation disposed of the matter as far as the city council was concerned.

Commissioner Butler, however, voiced his opposition to the council ignoring charges because a policeman resigns.

"I believe that a record of the evidence should be taken for use in future contingencies," he suggested. "I know of a case of a policeman who resigned under these circumstances and later was reinstated."

Police Commissioner Ringer announced that he would attach a copy of the charges to Burchard's personal record in the chief's office.

TWO MEN FINED $1,000 EACH ON LIQUOR CHARGES

Reiger Brothers Plead Guilty to Violation of Reed Amendment; Others Are Under Indictment.

Federal Judge Woodrough yesterday afternoon fined two men $1,000 each and another $50 and costs on a charge of violating the Reed amendment.

At the last sitting of the federal grand jury indictments were returned against Oscar and Nathan Reiger, wholesale liquor dealers of Kansas City; Charles A. McFadden, a Kansas City drayman; Aaron Lowey, now in the Douglas county jail, and Leroy Pegeau, Howard Goulding and Earl K. Buck, Omaha men, out on bond.

Feeling that they were caught with the goods on them, the Reiger brothers appeared before Judge Woodrough, acknowledged that they sold liquor to come into Nebraska and pleaded guilty to the charges in the indictment. They were each fined $1,000, which they paid.

As mitigating circumstances, Oscar Reiger pleaded that he was 26 years old, had been a soldier for 15 months and that he did not know that it was a crime to sell liquor that was ultimately to be transported into a dry state.

Delivered Liquor.

McFadden, the drayman, through his attorney, asserted that he had the liquor from the store of the Reiger brothers, taking it to a hotel, where it was turned over to a porter, who in turn, delivered it to Lowey, the bootlegger, he bringing it on to Omaha, where it is charged that it was delivered to Pegeau and Buck, the Omaha men.

McFadden was let off easy on account of claiming that he did not know that he was violating a law and that he did not know that the liquor was to have been shipped out of Missouri.

The three Omaha men, it is understood by Attorney Allen, will plead guilty to the charges in the indictment some day this week.

The indictment is said to be faulty in this, that it fails to charge that an offense against the government was committed by any of the defendants.

BELATED PROBE OF DROWNING IS ASKED BY SMITH

Week After Death of Four Children In Riverview Park Mayor Decides Investigation Necessary.

Following the publication in The Bee that the city commissioners devoted their exclusive time and energy Monday to a tempestuous discussion of the Leavenworth street repaving proposition, to the exclusion of water important and pressing matters, and ignoring the popular demand for an investigation of the drowning of four school children at Riverview park last Thursday, Mayor Smith yesterday morning, nearly a week after the tragedy, offered a resolution directing Commissioner Falconer to make a complete report on the subject.

Severe and bitter criticism on the part of the parents of the victims have been directed at the mayor and Commissioners Falconer and Ringer, who are charged with neglect and indifference in connection with the management of the park system and police department.

No Physicians Ready.

Mr. Falconer is blamed for allowing the children to venture into 15 feet of water with leaky boats and Mr. Ringer is held responsible for neglecting to have the pulmotor in working condition. If the lung-motor had been in shape and a city physician had arrived promptly on the scene, the life of one of the victims at least could have been saved, according to the opinion of those who witnessed the catastrophe.

There was no physician at the police station when the emergency call was sent in. He arrived at the park three quarters of an hour after the call was received, it is said.

The dead bodies remained on the bank of the pond without medical attention until the city physician arrived, while indignant spectators denounced the seeming indifference and neglect.

Preparing Report.

Mr. Falconer declared he was preparing a report on the drowning. The extent of Mr. Ringer's efforts to explain his part in connection with the tragedy has been to announce that pulmotors were not good.

Commenting outside of the council on the Riverview affair, Mr. Falconer stated that the boats were leaky, but he did not believe they were more leaky than the average park boats. He added that the boats were in the control of the concessionaire of the park. He also believed that the city physician supervised the outing last Thursday should have exercised greater caution. He has already explained his version of the pulmotor feature of the case by stating that he does not keep a pulmotor at Riverview park until the swimming pool is opened for the season.

Holdup Is Reported.

P. F. Miller, Conant hotel, was held up and robbed at 11:30 p. m. Monday by two men at 120 North Twenty-fifth street of $80, according to a report made to police.

My HEART and My HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

Why Madge Was Frightened at the Situation.

Kenneth Stockbridge's tired face brightened with a smile as he caught sight of our party. But beyond the smile and a bow he made no effort to speak to us, even though the table to which the waiter had escorted his pastry was very near our own.

Of course we realized at once the reason for his constraint. It was evident in his wife's attitude. She included us all in a curt, unsmiling nod, then dropped inquiringly into a seat, paying no attention, but staring moodily at her plate.

She was in one of her worst moods. One could see it not only in her manner, but in the tightened lips and deepened pallor of her husband, and the worried looks of the elderly man and woman, who, together with two younger women near Milly Stockbridge's own age, made up the group at their table.

"Little Sweetie's pape and mamma and fond sisters are with us tonight," Bess Dean murmured anxiously, but after my first start of dismay, realized that the people at the other table could not possibly have heard her. She has the trick of speaking in an almost inaudible tone, yet managing to make herself comprehended by the person she is addressing.

Bess Dean Observes.

I was relieved, however, when in another minute the orchestra struck up a highly incoporate selection, which made it possible for one's next neighbor to shout the most dangerous secrets without the slightest chance of having them overheard.

"You know, I think there's going to be fireworks," Bess Dean went on, knowingly pretending to be absorbed in buttering a roll. There was the naive enjoyment of a child at a circus in her voice and manner, and I realized that while she might have generous, sensible moments in which she would give any aid in her power to her harassed principal, yet her general attitude toward the domestic tragedy of Kenneth and Milly Stockbridge was that of a spectator, who did not much care whether she were amused or shocked so long as the drama remained interesting.

I was not certain how much she knew or guessed concerning Milly Stockbridge's insane and absurd jealousy of me, which had so nearly proved a tragedy upon the night of the reception to Dicky at the principal's home. Nor did I care particularly except for my fear that through some inadvertent look or gesture Dicky might suspect the truth. He had bent toward Miss Dean as she spoke, and I saw a look of surprise flash into his face.

A Cruel Complaint.

"Fireworks?" he repeated wonderingly.

"Pipe the thunderbolt at your right," Miss Dean went on mischievously. "Kenny's been doing something he hadn't order. Perhaps he didn't give the poodle the proper amount of calories or whatever you call 'em in his evening meal. At any rate, the missus is on the warpath, and if things don't go just her way—just you get ready to dodge the silver! She'll start heaving 'em at Kenny, but she has a woman's aim, and you're about the right distance for an innocent bystander."

She was dimpling adorably as she talked, and Dicky laughed heartily at what he evidently accepted as audacious nonsense. But I took advantage of his absorption to murmur a worried question in the ear of Alice Holcombe on the other side of me.

"Do you think we ought to get out of here?"

"We can't," she responded promptly, "without attracting attention both from Milly and the public, which we don't want. You see, we've already ordered, and the waiter will be here in a minute or two with our food. No, there's nothing to do but to sit tight. There's one consolation, her people are all with her. With them all around her they can't repress her if she goes beyond bounds. Just listen to her. That's an old trick of hers, to worry the life out of her husband and her relatives until they take her to some place of this kind—she loves gaiety of any sort—and then proceed to let loose all the meanness that's in her."

From the other table came the confirmation of her words. Milly Stockbridge's voice was raised shrilly.

"For heaven's sake, Ken, don't slouch like that in your chair. I should think you could manage to sit up straight even if you can't stand that way. You just do it on purpose to annoy me."
