Consult Your Dentist Often Pay more attention to your teeth and you'll pay less money to your dentist. How often should a person visit a dentist? This is a question frequently asked and the answer is "every six months regularly, and oftener if a cavity is detected, a filling becomes loose or the gums become spongy and teeth ache." Crowns and bridge work become necessary as a direct result of neglect; pyorrhea is usually the sequel of insanitary mouth conditions, which regular cleansing and timely treatment might have prevented. It is an indefensible practice to extract teeth which may be saved, or to devitalize a live nerve merely for the purpose of making a crown or bridge, and yet this practice is too often resorted to in offices where ignorance or greed predominate. It would be a God-send to America if a "Save the Teeth" campaign could be carried out as successfully as the "Save the Food" campaign was, and would result in a better understanding and closer co-operation between the public and the dentists. In this office you are welcome to an examination of your teeth at any time—and should defects be found requiring attention, an estimate will be given you without obligating you in any way. Moderate charges, cleanliness, guaranteed work, elimination of needless pain, are some of the reasons so many people come here for their dental work. My offer of free examination, expert opinion and honest advice should prove an incentive for everyone to come in frequently to secure the "ounce of prevention" that is "worth a pound of cure." The privilege of consulting my entire staff of dental specialists makes this office the logical place for people to come who have "unusual teeth" or "difficult work" as well as those who are "extremely sensitive to pain."
