CIRCUS MAY NOT SHOW IN OMAHA BECAUSE OF TAX

Ringling Agent Says Omaha Tax Bars Reputable Shows and Favors Grifters and Gamblers.

There is only one great three ring circus touring America today, and that show, the consolidated Barnum & Bailey and Ringling Brothers organizations is liable to sidetrack Omaha this season because of a new ordinance which imposes a tax said to be excessive on circuses of this class. S. W. Beckett, advance man of the circus, was in the city Saturday, to arrange for the appearance of the big aggregation here sometime in the future.

He was under the impression that old occupation license of $300 per year was still in effect but he learned that a new ordinance, operative June 20, has been passed by the city commission and the license for first class shows will then be $500. "This," said he, "is prohibitive and may render it impossible for our circus, the only large one now touring America, to appear in Omaha this season. We are only showing in the largest cities of the country and I find that Omaha now has the largest license tax for big circuses in America. New York City only charges $150 a day, while Omaha has put the tax up to $500. "Theatres are only taxed by city ordinance $100 per year, and the new rate fixed by the city commission would appear to be rank discrimination and passed for the purpose of excluding first-class shows. Favors Small Shows. "Smaller circuses, with many objectionable garbling and graft features, and with their criminal hangers on, are permitted to show at the old license and they charge the same prices for inferior performances and attractions as the only big circus in America." Mr. Beckett said Omaha would not be included in the itinerary of the circus as long as the present license fee operates and this will bring grief to circus loving persons, young or old. The circus had expected to come here in August.
