Miss Esther Applegate was re-leased from the Women's Detention ome Saturday night by Dr. Palmer Findley, who declared the girl's examination showed she was not afflicted with a social disease.

Dr. Findley also told Attorney Lloyd Magney that Mrs. Helen Baldwin and Miss Wilma Reed also were clear of any disease, as far as his examinations showed.

Miss Reed still is being held at the Detention home, while Mrs. Baldwin is reported to have been released Sunday afternoon. Defy Court Order.

Judge Holmes declared that Ringer and Eberstein would be called to account this morning for ignoring the order of the court.
"I will not say just what course
I will pursue," said Judge Holmes.
"I want to look up the law and be sure of what I mean to do before I speak. I will say, however, I am indignant. Ringer and Eberstein are trampling under foot law and order. It is my duty to call them to account, and I most certainly shall do so the first thing Monday."

Richard J. Organ of Council Bluffs has been retained to co-operate with Attorney J. R. Lones in obtaining the release of Miss Reed, who is being held prisoner in the Detention home, the attorneys declare, contrary to law.

Mr. Lones and Mr. Organ were in consultation all yesterday afternoon "Miss Reed will be given her free-dom today," said Mr. Lones. "Heads of the police department and officials of the Detention home have got an accounting to render. They are going to account too."

Yet the average policeman seems to imagine that he is clothed with some extra legal authority, which permits him to assume, on his own judgment, the duties of complainant, prosecutor and judge.

This arbitrary attitude has been displayed by members of the Omaha police force for a long time. It was a customary habit during the last city administration. It has per-

BOYLES COLLEGE FIRST STARTED IN TWO ROOMS

Name Now Stands for Largest Business Training School in Western Half of United States.

It was 20 years ago that H. B. Byoles, rented two small rooms and started his great idea of service to business in the way of training young men and young women into efficient helpers to business institutions. That idea, after being crystallized into a business college of standing in this territory, has grown entil today the name of Boyles college stands for the largest business training institution in the western half of the United States.

Mr. Boyles has spent 15 years as court reporter, which experience had shown to him the results of incompetence. Responsible positions with the Uuion Pacific railroad and the Pullman company had brought to him the trouble of business firms in finding reliable and efficient helpers.

Started Boldly.

He started boldly out upon his little school and by perseverance and determination established himself and his school where today he employs a large staff of teachers and has his school housed in a spacious building entirely devoted to that work. He demonstrated that a school conducted on the proper basis-that of service to the student and to the business world-can be a financial success and the pride of his work lies in these two things. He is helping young men and women to better themselves and he has built up for the name of his school among business institutions the reputation that a Boyles graduate is ready to fill the position for which his diploma certifies him.

In a recent issue of the Journal of Accountancy-the professional organ of the American Institute of Accountants -the lack of trained accountants is editorially summarized

"The scarcity of qualified accountants is becoming a most serious matter and the government is likely to go to even greater lengths than heretofore to obtain the necessary number and quality of men to supervise accounting work.

"The heads of great departments write or telegraph to the American Institute of Acountants and to prominent firms begging for help.

"The supply is far below the demand. The work for accountants will be greater after the war than it was before it the war than it was before it began, and there will be com-paratively fewer men to under-take it."
