

DEAN BURNETT EXPECTED BACK FROM OVERSEAS

Will Return to Lincoln in July; Prof. Scott to Spend Summer in Research Work.

Dean E. A. Burnett of the Nebraska agricultural college writes Chancellor Avery from Le Mans, France, as follows: "As you have doubtless seen by the American papers the army is being returned to the United States much more rapidly than was contemplated early in the year. As a result the educational work in France is to close on June 1st and very soon thereafter, probably not later than June 15, the entire educational corps is to be returned to the United States in a body, under present plans.

This will mean that I will be in Lincoln sometime early in July. I have had a very interesting time and feel I have been successful in my work. I have lectured on agricultural subjects in the different army schools and in two embarkation areas, Le Mans and Brest."

Prof. R. D. Scott of the department of English literature at the state university, will spend the summer in research work in Chicago. He will leave Lincoln about June 16. Professor Scott is deeply interested in the study of old Irish and is one of only about six experts in that language in the United States. He is at work on a dictionary which is as yet lacking in that language.

The teachers college high school of the state university is holding a successful summer session. One hundred and thirty-five students are enrolled. The following faculty are conducting the session: Charles W. Taylor, principal; Sarah A. Ryan, superintendent of city schools, St. Edwards, Neb., mathematics; Ona Ruth Wagner, supervisor of history teachers' college, history; Blanche M. Lyman, instructor in history state agricultural school, history; Marian M. Pettie, head of department of English, Fremont, high school, English; Elsie Day, assistant professor of pharmacology, university of Nebraska, Physiology; Merle Simpson, botany; Leucy Hill, shorthand and typewriting; D. S. Damer, superintendent of Dilley city schools, reading, grammar, orthography, penmanship, mental arithmetic, and agriculture; H. T. Smith, superintendent of city schools, Chappell, Neb., arithmetic, geography, algebra, and geometry; Fern Phillips, principal Lewiston consolidated schools, history civics and music; W. S. Rankin, superintendent of city schools, Tecumseh, physiology and botany.

Prof. J. E. Weaver of the state university is working this summer for the Carnegie institute. His territory will include Nebraska, Colorado and Kansas, with headquarters at the Alpine laboratory on Pike's Peak. His special problem is a study of the root systems of grazing and crop plants.

Prof. Leva Walker of the botanical department of the state university is teaching in the summer school and is also carrying on two months service for the government. In the latter work she is making investigation of the shipping conditions of raspberries, logan and blackberries. The government is seeking to place responsibility for losses upon the proper ones.

Dr. F. D. Barker of the state university will leave, after the summer school, for the biological station in the Bermuda islands. He will complete a collection and study of the animal parasites of the Bermudas, upon which he has been engaged for some time. This work is pursued through a grant of the national academy of science, in recognition of work previously done at Harvard.

Stella Louhrigge, '95, University of Nebraska, has written from near Constantinople, Turkey, that she is soon to go to Talar, near Cesarea, in the center of Asia Minor where she was a teacher in a girl's school prior to the war.

John Zimmer '10, is an agricultural expert employed by the government of British New Guinea. He has recently made a two-months' inspection trip of the Australasian islands, looking after the cocoon, rubber and hemp plantations. He met some strange experiences, having to wade through large territories of aquatic land. He looks after both insect pests and plant diseases of these plantations.

The department of entomology at the state farm is making a special study of the cutworm which worked considerable damage in the spring on corn and alfalfa. As yet no results can be given out. Pocket gophers also are being investigated in the eastern and western parts of the state and the best methods sought of destroying them. As the summer develops, experiments, begun two years ago, on grasshoppers will be continued. Prof. M. H. Swank expects to stay in Lincoln and direct all these lines. He will be assisted by R. W. Dawson in the cutworm investigation, by C. E. Mickel and W. G. Landers on pocket gophers and by E. J. Yates on grasshoppers. The department is now doing some work on seed corn maggots.

Hastings College Notes.

College commencement at Hastings is over and the summer school begins Thursday. Former Congressman Sloan of Geneva gave the commencement address, speaking on the subject, "Removal of Ancient Landmarks." The graduating class was awarded the Thomas and prizes were given out as follows: Winners of the Curran Biblical contest: First—Alice Carpenter, $15 in gold. Second—James Rigg, $10 in gold. Tenth—Essay Prize—Alice Carpenter, $15 in gold.

The Curran Biblical contest was held in the college chapel Tuesday morning following the final chapel service. The orators were of a very high quality. At the final chapel service a number of the old students took part in an impromptu program, following the regular chapel exercises. Dean Weyer gave a review of the college work of the year including the student activities and the class room work. This year was considered the best in the history of the school as respects student work and success in student activities. It was also a year of financial success, more than $100,000 was added to the permanent fund in pledges, notes and cash, and the current expenses were fully met.

Hastings College society re-elected the former officers and at the Alumni dinner following the commencement, Wednesday night, Prof. F. W. Weyer was made president, Supt. J. R. Blinn, secretary, and Mrs. Lida Lowell-Hopkins, secretary-treasurer.

Nebraska School of Business.

Raymond Smith and Bryan Littell, two former Nebraska School of Business boys who have just returned from Europe, were renewing acquaintances at the college Monday, last. Guy Easley, '11, arrived from overseas last Wednesday. His sister, Miss Ruby Easley, who is a student at the school, accompanied him to their home for a few days' visit.

Word has just been received at the office that Miss Agnes Meline, former student of the school, will engage in missionary work for the Baptist church.

Miss Ada Rundell, a graduate of the normal training department, has been elected to a commercial teaching position in the summer school faculty of the state normal at Plattville, Wis.

My Heart and My Husband Revelations of a Wife

What Mrs. Durkee Said to Rita Brown.

To all outward appearance the big touring car which Alfred Durkee had summoned from a neighboring garage held the merriest of care-free parties as we were rushed over the smooth Long Island roads on our way to "The Sand Pile."

But I—who had gleaned from both observation and the confidence of others many facts indicating the true condition of affairs—knew that the laughing face masked anything but merriment in most of our number.

Edith Fairfax had remained upon the Durkee veranda with my father and Dicky's mother, saying frankly that she had been so long where there was no chance for quiet and beauty that she would not exchange the moonlight and the apple blossoms for the most celebrated entertainment in the world. There was a quiet determination in her voice that told me what long cannot be said as she sat there, the French battle-front had done to develop the timid, thinking southern art student, whom I had seen roused out of her apparently colorless personality but twice, both times when Dicky was in question.

In Gay Spirits. That her love for my husband was still flaming within her soul I was sure, although, despite my knowledge that they had for a time been stationed near each other in France, I hugged to my heart the belief that Dicky held for her only a strong brotherly liking.

The innate justice of my nature compelled me to respect any sympathy for Edith Fairfax, even though the primitive jealousy which in greater or less degree is hidden in the nature of every woman kept me from sincere liking. I am sure I would have otherwise entertained for the girl.

The contrast between her and her sister was a marked one, although I knew that before Edith's expedition to France the girls had been much alike. But Leila's development was all in the future. She was still essentially immature, inexperienced and as such, I was sure, she was huddled against me, in fact, I had a sudden feeling that she was instinctively shrinking from the proximity of Rita Brown on the other side of her, and that primitive jealousy was awakening the possibilities of her soul.

Rita Brown was in the wildest of spirits. Her laughter undeniably musical, but loud, bubbled forth at the slightest provocation. She kept up a running fire of railery with Dicky and Alfred Durkee, who sat challenging Alfred's mother, who had insisted with the pretty fussiness which always gains her point, upon sitting in the front seat with her driver.

"Oh, Mother Durkee!" Rita called audaciously, and then, as my little neighbor vouchsafed no answer, she called again, "Mother Durkee can you hear me, or are you so conceited at sitting in the front seat that you don't want to?"

Little Mrs. Durkee gave a low laugh, one in which I, who know her so well, recognized the dainty, malicious note of which she is capable on occasion.

"I never answer when I'm called 'Fairfax' my name," she said pettishly. "If you'd said 'stepmother' men, I would have been all right. I'm old enough to be mother to young things like Edith and Leila, but not to Madge or you."

"You must be like my mother," she said merrily. "She makes every daughter and daughter-in-law call her sister."

"We drew up to the entrance of 'The Sand Pile' as she spoke, so there was no opportunity for comment or retort upon little Mrs. Durkee's part if she had wished it. But I wondered if there had been a challenge in Rita Brown's answer.

Many Students Attend Summer Classes of Business College

College Opens on Sept. 15

Cotner college, at Bethany, a beautiful suburb of Lincoln, Neb., was founded in 1889. Its location is ideal. The school has all the requirements of the cloister and at the same time its proximity to Lincoln enables the student to share all the metropolitan features that come to a city. Cotner offers exceptional opportunities for close, personal attention of the teachers for self-expression in the classroom; for the development of leadership in the various features of college life, as in student organizations, contests in scholarship, oratory and athletics, in dramatics, music, etc. Worthy of special mention is its scholastic standing. Cotner is one of the four highest ranking colleges of Nebraska. It grants First Grade State and University Life Teacher's certificates. It has been placed in the A rank of American colleges. Its Odomas grant admission to the post-graduate schools of the world, including Harvard, Yale and Oxford.

Florence School Holds Class Day Exercises

The class day program of the Florence school was given Thursday evening before a large audience.

The direction of E. R. Misner of The Misner School of the Spoken Word, proved the most successful ever staged on the south side.

Hazel Zerbe as the Mouse, did work far superior to an amateur as did Jack Oswald, in the character of Jefferson Ryder. Jim Webber, as the Lion, surpassed his previous records as one of South Side's actors. His interpretation of this character was an artistic piece of impersonation and showed much study and thought from this youthful boy of 18.

Glenn Bevington as Hon. Fitzroy Babbly, and Louise Mathews as Kate Roberts added real artistic touches to the scene as did George Hansen in the part of Ex-Judge Scott.

The entire cast of 18 showed
