

South Side MAYOR DELIVERS "WAR TALK" TO STATE EAGLES

Urges Members to Take Some Action in Peace Situation, Which Has Again Be- come Acute.

Mayor Ed P. Smith delivered distinctly a "war talk" at the opening session of the 14th annual convention of the Nebraska State Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, assembled at 1:30 o'clock at the Eagles' hall, Twenty-third and N streets, yesterday.

One hundred delegates from Greater Omaha and the state attended.

"The peace situation," the mayor said, "has again become acute. I suggest that the delegates here assembled carry the news to your home areas urging discussion of these important matters."

"It's not my place to say what shall be done. But certainly some action should be taken and an organization like yours can easily take the initiative."

The mayor related a story of an incident while he resided on an up-town exemption board during the last draft. Most of the city and county officials had turned out to bid farewell to a final contingent of departing soldiers.

Sixth Son to Go.

An old woman, the mayor said, separated from the crowd and advancing toward him in broken words, thanked him for the consideration he had shown in caring for the departing soldiers. The mayor was surprised.

"Have you a son going, madam?" he asked.

"Yes," the old woman answered. "He's my sixth to be called."

Rev. R. L. Wheeler, pastor of the Wheeler Memorial church, opened the session yesterday with an invocation. Mr. Wheeler has been a member of the Omaha aerie for 14 years. G. F. Freeman of Beatrice, worthy state president, presided and responded to the mayor's address.

During the afternoon, delegates and members, numbering 200, adjourned to take an automobile ride over the boulevard system of Greater Omaha. Twenty cars made up the parade. At the evening session, local Degree team, No. 154, initiated a class of 40 candidates. There was no other business. The convention will continue today, adjourning this evening with a final smoker and entertainment at 8:30 o'clock. The remainder of the state delegates, bringing the total of visitors up to more than 200, are expected to arrive during the day. An election and installation of officers will be held this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock.

DELAYS ARE COSTLY. Folks and people, the way the market on clothes looks to us at this time waiting is as good as paying more. There's no chance for any general lowering of prices. Much as we would like to invite you to a feast of extraordinary, etc., etc. it can't be did, but as the market is we are doing some wonders. These boys' tompons for the kiddies at 98c have a wonderful lot of wear in them. These men's all wool suits at $18.50, $18.50 and $22.50 would be worth the money in 1914. Hart Schaffner and Marks clothing, Mensinger underwear, Black Cat and Interwoven and Everwear hosiery, and a lot of other things you can find at Flynn's are always worth the money whether the market is up or down. Grace Methodists Clear Debt of $10,000 on Church Building

Kirkpatrick, former pastor during the period the new church was being built and now district superintendent at Holdrege, Neb., will deliver the principal address, has been arranged for Sunday morning. The mortgage will be torn up as a part of the ceremony.

The Grace church, formerly the First Methodist church of South Omaha before the merger of the city with Omaha, sold its original site in 1914. The auditorium was converted into a lodge hall, which now stands at Twenty-third and N streets.

Congressional Medal Proposed for Aviators

Washington, June 16.—A resolution authorizing the president to confer the congressional medal of honor upon Captain Alcock and Lieutenant Brown, and expressing the admiration of congress at their feat in making a non-stop flight across the Atlantic, was introduced today by Representative La Guardia, republican, of New York.

My Heart and My Husband Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

The Way Rita Brown "Led" Them All.

A H, this is something like living," Rita Brown sank into the chair the waiter held out for her, put her elbows on the table, her chin in her hands, and drew a long ecstatic breath.

Mrs. Durkee, Leila Fairfax and I looked at her in mild astonishment at her exuberance. Alfred Durkee and Dicky laughed aloud.

"Poor little ingenue from Podunk," Dicky teased. "Was she never in a cabaret before? Well, she shall see everything that's going, so she shall!"

"That man walking this way is called a waiter, Rita," Alfred Durkee took the cue with preternatural solemn face. "If he asks you what you want to eat just tell him the opposite thing to what you would really like. That is the rule here."

"See the space in the center with the rope around it?" Dicky interrupted. "Some of the oldest female inhabitants of New York will presently give what they call a dance, the creating of a non-stop fight as they attempt to keep time to the music which is what is known as the jazz band. Can you remember that, dear? You will want to tell your friends in Podunk about it, and you mustn't forget it. Perhaps you had better try to spell it. Come now—repeat it after me, j-a-z-z."

Like Old Comrades

Miss Brown regarded him stonily. "Are you practicing that patter, hoping you'll get a try-out in vaudeville?" she asked. "If so, take a sign painting, Dicky-bird—as a humorist you're an awful flivver."

She turned to Alfred Durkee with a dazzling smile. Her manner had the effect of sweeping every one but him out of the universe.

"I suppose I am an awful idiot, Alf," she said deprecatingly, "but I've been shut in an eternity, and I like a wild thing let out of a cage."

Alfred patted her shoulder reassuringly, and I saw his mother wince at the sight of the familiar comradely touch.

"Go as far as you like," he said, and there was indulgent tenderness in his voice. "Dicky's voice was full of passionate protest. 'I give warning right now that I'm both a quiet man and an economical one—'

An Adroit Move.

An irrespressible burst of laughter greeted this, for Dicky's recklessness in spending is known to all his friends.

"Well, I am!" he retorted. "And let me tell you, Alfred Durkee, that you little know what you are bringing on us. Two courts—police and bankruptcy—stare us in the face. Unsay them words."

"Shut up," Alfred Durkee retorted, "and let us order. Come, Rita you're the invalid, what do you want?"

"Oh, never mind the cats, yet!" she said. "But I'm dying for a drink. And I don't want any of your ordinary cocktails, either. I want something with a good kick in it."

Alfred Durkee looked at her anxiously.

"Are you sure your physician would want you to have it?" he asked.

"I'm my own physician," she retorted defiantly. "Go on, Alf, don't be spoil sport. I'll order it myself if you don't. He turned to the rest of us.

"Would any of the rest of you like a cocktail?" he asked.

His mother, Leila Fairfax and I promptly declined. I caught little Mrs. Durkee looking anxiously at her son, knew that she mirrored my own anxiety concerning Dicky's course. Before the two men had gone to the bar I had secretly been a little uneasy concerning Dicky's apparently increasing fondness for alcoholic drinks, and knew without her telling me that Mrs. Durkee was even more anxious about Alfred.

Dicky's answer was prompt, non-chalant.

"I've got the seat next to the driver on my wagon," he asserted. "Got to come to anyway in a few days, so I'm getting in practice."

"Well, for goodness sake!" Rita Brown cried. "Isn't anybody but Alf going to drink to my returning health?"

I could have shaken her for the adroit manner in which she had made it almost impossible for her host to do anything but join her in the drink. I was sure that she had seen, as I had, the hesitancy in young Durkee's manner, sure also that she was mentally gloating over her success. And the look in his mother's eyes as the two touched glasses, made my heart ache.
