LAW-BREAKING AND LAWLESS POLICE
Is it necessary for enforcing the liquor laws to set against all other laws? Does punishment of law-breaking call for midnight invasion of people's homes, beating up the inmates and general rough-housing of common decency? Are our "booze houses" a law unto themselves and above all other law?

You should know that
Omaha is the largest grain market with receipts direct from the farm and not from other markets.

Welcome to America, Mr. Wilson!
Somebody had the wrong dope on hog prices?
Nothing to worry about now until the legislature meets.

The R-34 landed under its own power, which entitles it to the full credit of the trip.
Officers and crew of the R-34 were soothed and sustained by "jazz" played on a graphophone.
A poor little rich girl has been condemned by a New York judge to live on $1,500 per month.

Eighteen thousand Omahans watched an amateur game of base ball on Sunday, indicating how the interest turns in this community.
That cross-country run by army auto trucks will be an impressive spectacle, but the bullwhacker and the mule-skinner marked the transcontinental trail many years ago.

Mr. Wilson is reported to have conferred with members of his party on shipboard as to the contents of the message he is preparing for congress.
A few dozen burglars may have piled their trade and gotten away with the loot, but three points of whisk were captured after a father, mother and three children had been beaten by the "morals" squad.

Farming With a Difference
Soldiers who are restless indoors after the life in the open will give heed to a booklet sent out by the War department from the office of Col. Arthur Woods, assistant to the secretary.
Many a man has not loved his little old job so much since he renewed his acquaintance with it.
Urban sophistication in the cities poked fun, before the war, at the farmer.

Why can't we have a little less lawlessness and a little more common sense in the handling of this business?
President's Pre-War Preparations.
Report made in the house by the chairman of a committee of investigation on the course pursued by the president for some months prior to our entry into the war promises some interesting disclosures.

Authorized to name a council for defense as part of a preparedness movement, the president by a perversion of the plain intent of the law took to himself the formulation of plans for the entire campaign.
Careful estimates put the number of needed homes in the United States at 10,000,000.

The Basis for Prosperity.
"Good times" in America do not rest solely on the plenitude of money and the consequent high prices.
Warnings against unwise speculation as well timed, and should be heeded, but opportunity for legitimate investment is presented on every hand.

Control of Automobile Thievery.
Massachusetts has a new law designed to deal with the crime of stealing automobiles.
Americans also "cleaned up" in the inter-allied army athletic games, showing the versatility of the boys who went over. You can't beat 'em

Reindeer and the Eskimos
Theodore G. Joslin in Boston Transcript.
Washington—Depletion of walrus, whale and other wild game threatened the extinction of Alaska's Eskimo population a score of years ago.
The Eskimo would have been content to toll around his igloo as long as the cold weather, whale oil and blubber lasted, but that was before the white man persisted in civilizing him, before lolling was classed as laziness, and before evolution of the Eskimo from a hunter and fisherman into a herder of reindeer had begun.

Each year, as the fair draws near, the Eskimo may be seen busily working over long strips of leather or putting the finishing touches on a pair of reindeer mitts.
The Eskimo drives on the course a few minutes before the race begins, and the driver has been his effort to get into the prize money.

Prosperity and Economics
A man's personal circumstances make all the difference in the world in his view of economic rights and wrongs.
No state in the union is more opposed to bolshevism than its crack-brained and hideous tenets than Kansas.

about uncertainly. Looking back at the bunch of grass, she saw a great, teeth-filled mouth open wide in a sleepy yawn.
The water goblins soon recovered from the alarm, and after a time General Croaker came crawling out of the mud.
