Grace Demarias Only Woman A. P. Operator

Mrs. Grace Demarias RINEHART MARS DEN PHOTO

We speak of keeping abreast of the times, but what would you think of being one step ahead? To know all the world's news long before it is given to a waiting public through the medium of the press, in short to have your finger on the pulse of a great throbbing universe, that is the unique position held by a woman in Omaha.

Mrs. Grace Demarias was never on the battlefield, nor does she fly over land and sea by dirigible or aeroplane; she merely sits very quietly in front of her typewriter beside a tiny clicking instrument in the office of The Bee and transmits the doings of the universe from the wires to the paper in her machine. This slender little person who knows when empires crumble and thrones totter long before common mortals even hear the rumblings of disaster has the distinction of being the only Associated Press woman operator in the United States. Her position is indeed a responsible one, for her reports must be absolutely correct and not an inflection of her instrument is lost, so keenly does she listen and concentrate.

The only woman representative of this great service, the Associated Press, has won her position by dint of the hardest, most continuing labor. In a little town tucked away among the primeval forests in Canada a little girl watched her father as he sat by his telegraph instrument, taking messages. This mysterious invention of science which makes all the world our next door neighbor fascinated the little maid and she determined to solve its mysteries. Painstakingly she learned the alphabet, the first rudiment to be mastered, and slowly she gained skill in translating the innumerable click-clicks.

The fleeting years found a clear-eyed young woman a valuable employe in the offices of the Western Union, for the lessons in telegraphy learned in childhood had not been forgotten and she had chosen this most fascinating work as her vocation. Mrs. Demarias was not content, however, for that slave driver, Ambition, goads his menials on and on until the very pinnacle of their talent has been reached. When her day's work was done, this energetic woman practiced in taking the Associated Press messages in a newspaper office. She did not seek cooler climes or amusement when a vacation was given her, but spent the entire time in grilling work that she might gain speed and efficiency in this important line.

The reward came with the offer of a position, and she entered her career in Mitchell, South Dakota. Many newspapers have claimed Mrs. Demarias' services since she began a year ago, for one of the joys of being affiliated with the Associated Press is the opportunity for travel.

Enthusiasm and love of her chosen profession is very evident when Mrs. Demarias speaks of it. Many of the operators complain of the long, confining hours, but the only woman operator in America is more enamored of the work every day. While we are occupied with the petty round of every-day duties Mrs. Demarias is granted the vision of the entire universe. She literally has the globe at the tips of her 10 fingers, for it makes no difference whether Mrs. Brown in Hoboken sues for alimony or whether some long-haired bolshevik unearths one of the czar's cuff buttons in Petrograd. Mrs. Demarias is cognizant of the fact almost before it happens. To those who chafe at their environment and long for a wider scope, there is no need to traverse land or sea, simply learn the mystical language of this tiny instrument and the gates of the world will swing wide on their hinges.
