

PALMER TELLS CHARACTER OF LEAGUE PROBE

Denies That Money Was Spent With Newspapers and Attempts Made to Excite Mob Violence.

Attorney J. P. Palmer of Omaha, charged by C. A. Sorenson, attorney for the National Nonpartisan league, with directing operations of detectives to manufacture evidence of pro-Germanism among the league members for an association of business men, makes the following reply to the charge:

"The statement by one Ralph Moore, relative to the Nonpartisan league during the summer of 1918, ordinarily should receive no attention, but because of misunderstandings which might arise, I make a brief statement.

Investigate Disloyalty Charges.

"During 1918, there were so many stories of disloyalty of the Nonpartisan league, that a committee was organized to investigate. This committee was composed of men from different parts of the state of all vocations. It was thought advisable to get some inside information of the real character of the league. A man was obtained from what was then supposed to be a reliable source, and his reports, together with information which the committee gathered showed that the membership of the Nonpartisan league in Nebraska, was not entirely disloyal and no assertion has been made that the membership, as a whole, was pro-German.

"However, an investigation proved conclusively the following facts: The nonresident organizers were socialists and opposed to the war. Moore reported that several of the organizers were I. W. W.'s. The organizers always began their work by trying to get pro-German and nearly all pro-Germans were members of the league. Copies of the Nonpartisan league, printed in German, were distributed to those found to be sympathetic with Germany. Mr. Moore reported many instances in the offices of the league where the rank and file were urged in language sometimes too filthy to be reproduced. These records are on file, but have never been used because of not having corroborative evidence of Moore's statements. This committee was able to furnish to the lawyers for the Council of Defense, in its suit with the Nonpartisan league, enough facts so the league attorneys were glad to withdraw their suit and withdraw from the state, all nonresident organizers. This promise was not entirely kept, but efforts were made to get to the people so the league was not able to get more members.

tion which the committee gathered showed that the membership of the Nonpartisan league in Nebraska, was not entirely disloyal and no assertion has been made that the membership, as a whole, was pro-German.

Says Statements False.

"In regard to the charges about efforts to create mob violence, corrupt courts, or defame persons, I simply say those statements are absolutely false. The committee realized that mob violence is not argument and that the spirit of the Nebraska people would eventually revolt. I personally made several trips to counsel against such action. Moore states that thousands of dollars were spent in the newspapers. I call upon any newspaper which received money to make that fact public. I am and Moore included that falsehood, because the newspapers know the facts. No money whatever was spent in the newspapers and none was spent except to get information of disloyalty. No effort was ever made to fake evidence, but efforts were made to corroborate statements made by Moore of seditious utterances by league organizers."

WHEAT DEALERS MUST OBTAIN U. S. GRAIN LICENSES

Only Farmers and Small Bakery Owners Are Exempt From Government Ruling Regarding Permits.

With the exceptions of the farmers and the owners of small bakeries, all persons, firms and corporations dealing in wheat or wheat products have until July 17 to obtain licenses from the United States Grain corporations. Failing to obtain such licenses, these dealers in wheat and wheat products will be violators of the law and prosecution and punishment may result.

Last year the food administration had jurisdiction over the handling of all wheat products intended for food. With the discontinuance of the food administration office, its affairs, so far as they pertained to wheat and its products, were turned over to the grain corporation. In this jurisdiction, including Nebraska, a portion of Iowa and South Dakota,

My Heart and My Husband

—ADELE GARRISON'S New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

Madge Stilled Even Her Breath at the Lady's Approach.

The click of the high-heeled shoes came swiftly down the hall, and then the tall, magnificently built figure of the woman I had seen in the cafe upon the night of my poor father's "celebration dinner" was silhouetted for an instant against the dim light she had left. I was holding to the pall-like curtains of the alcove with a firm hand, determined that no tremor of them should awaken the woman's suspicion of my presence, but equally determined that the tiny aperture in the curtains through which I was peering should remain open.

Allen Drake had stationed himself with one hand upon the simple mechanism that controlled the electric lamp which the occupant of the apartment had turned low before going out. As she entered, his fingers touched it, and the full glow of the light flooded the room.

I do not know of any other woman save Lillian who would not have screamed or exclaimed at the sudden flare of the light, that glimpse of the strangers in her apartment which met her eyes. But she uttered no scream, said no word of protest or exclamation. Only one quickly drawn sibilant breath betrayed any emotion out of the ordinary.

The next instant her hand had shot to the electric wall switch, and the room was suddenly plunged into darkness. I heard no click of her heels, even no rustle of the pall-like curtains, but I felt their movement as they were softly, yet deftly pushed open and then the little figure of the woman stood in the alcove with me, so near that I could have put out my hand and touched her.

She had barely reached sanctuary, however, when Allen Drake's voice your little games are up. If you come out of that alcove and let us have a quiet little confidential chat drawn slowly, cooly:

"Come on now."

"It's no use, Mary, Jane, Susan, Suzanne, Mme. Robinetti, Mrs. Jane Rebbins. If you try any tricks, you may be able to wear something else besides striped gingham for the next few years."

He played the electric flashlight upon the floor; being careful to keep its rays from the corner of the alcove where I was standing fairly holding my breath, for fear my presence would be betrayed to the woman standing so tensely with her hand gripping the curtains. I felt an unreasoning fear of her, although the presence of Allen Drake and Lillian Underwood assured me ample protection.

"Come on now," he adjured, his voice a trifle sharper. "I'm liable to get peevish in a minute, for my time is valuable. Just come over here where it's much more comfortable than where you are."

I heard another deep-drawn breath, knew that the woman was bracing herself for the inevitable.

Then she parted the curtains and advanced toward M. Drake her path marked uncanonically by the glow of his flashlight. As she came toward him, Lillian stepped softly toward the curtains, and stood with her back to them, deftly closing the opening again.

Simply Regal.

Then, and only till then, did Mr. Drake move toward the electric wall switch. As he turned it on, the woman looked him up and down with magnificent scorn, then turned the same disdainful glance on Lillian.

"So!" she said.

I have never heard so much contempt and hatred crowded into a single monosyllable before.

She evidently braced herself for the reply, but both Allen Drake and Lillian Underwood are versed in psychology. Neither of them uttered a syllable, simply looked at her cooly, appraisingly, waited for her to speak again.

"Well!" she demanded after waiting a long moment. "What are you, and what do you want? Money and my few jewels I suppose. I must say I do not remember your faces although I suppose I could find them in the rogues' gallery."

She was simply regal in her manner.

I saw Allen Drake look his admiration of her coolness, but still he said no word.
