Young Not Sure. So did Blaine Young. Blaine was just a little less cocksure of himself-sort of lacking the edge necessary to win. He seemed to play on luck alone. Though his drives were hard and sure and his approaches excellent, the ball on the green invariably made him miserable. He missed short putts repeatedly.

The morning's play was even. Reynolds scored seven holes during the afternoon play and Young but three. The game ended at the 16th hole, when Young, though he had a chance to win the remaining holes, deliberately drove short on the tee-off. Reynolds, playing bet ter than par, lifted the ball to the green on the next shot and scored in four strokes.
