CHAPTER XXXVI. Marlowe Relizes His Danger.

"You say something in that manone's ideas arrange themselves few notes as usual-I didn't count within two weeks complete details about some new, illuminating thought. It is quite true. The awful intensity of ill-will that had flamed after me from those straining eyeballs had poured over my mind like a search-light. I was thinking quite clearly now, and almost coldly, for

I knew what-at least I knew whom -I had to fear, and instinct warned me that it was not a time to give room to the emotions that were fighting to possess me. The man hated me insanely. That incredible fact I suddenly knew. But the face had told me-it would have told anyof pounds' worth there were I have body-more than that. It was a face of hatred gratified, it proclaimed some damnable triumph. It had gloated over me driving away to myfate. This too was plain to me. And what was my fate? "I stopped the car. It had gone about two hundred and fifty yards, and a sharp bend of the road hid the spot where I had set Manderson down. I lay back in the seat and thought it out. Something was to happen to me. In Paris? Probablywhy else should I be sent there, with money and a ticket? But why Paris? That puzzled me, for I had no melodramatic idea about Paris. I put the point aside for a moment. I turned to the other things that had roused my attention that evening. The lie about my 'persuading him to go for a moonlight run.' What was the intention of that? Manderson, I said to myself, will be returning without me while I am on my way to Southampton. What will he tell them about me? How account for his returning alone and without the car? As I asked myself that sinister question there rushed into my mind the last of my difficulties: 'Where are the thousand pounds? And in the same instant came the

"I got up and stepped from the car. My knees trembled and I felt very sick. I saw the plot now-as I thought. The whole of the story about the papers and the necessity of their being taken to Paris was a olind. With Manderson's money about me, of which he would declare I had robbed him, I was to all from England, with every precauat once, and would know how to put them on my track. I should be arrested in Paris-if I got so farliving under a false name, after having left the car under a false name, Regulation May Be Used Here disguised myself, and traveled in a cabin which I had booked in ad-The city council is considering vance, also under a false name. These locks, you know, are pretty flimsy as a rule." Here Marlow paused and walked o the oaken desk before the windaw. Opening a drawer full of misellaneous objects, he took out a box of odd keys, and selected a small one distinguished by a piece of pink tape. He handed it to Trent. "I keep that by me as a sort of morbid memento. It is the key to the lock I smashed. I might have saved myself the trouble if I had known that this key was at that moment in the left-hand side-pocket of my overcoat. Manderson must have slipped it in, either while the coat was hanging in the hall or while he sat at my side in the car. I might not have found the tiny thing there for weeks -as a matter of fact I did find it two days after Monderson was dead -but a police search would have ound it in five minutes. And then I -I with the case and its contents in my pockets, my false name and my sham spectacles and the rest of it-I should have had no explanation to offer but the highly convincing one that I didn't know the key was there.'

Trent dangled the key by its tape idly. Then-"How do you know this is the key of that case?" he asked quickly.

"I tried it. As soon as I found in went up and fitted it to the lock. knew where I had left the thing. So do you, I think, Mr. Trent. Don't you?" There was a faint shade of nockery in Marlowe's voice! "Touche!" Trent said, with a dry

"There was no reason for hiding it," said Marlowe. "But to get back to my story. I burst the lock of the strap. I opened the case before one of the lamps of the car. The first thing I found in it I ought to have expected, of course; but I hadn't." paused and glanced at Trent. "It was-" began Trent mechanically; and then stopped himself. "Try not to bring me in any more, if you don't mind," he said, meeting the other's eye. "I have complimented you already in that document on your cleverness. You need not prove it by making the judge

It was not a pleasant task that faced me when Alice Holcombe hastthe declaration that she could not open his private desk even to get the doubtful glance at the confused mass papers he wished, because she "knew of papers in the lowest drawer, in m too well."

Only the fact that I suspected her secret hopeless fondness for her girlhood's friend and had compassion for it made me willing to take her place and to undertake the search which I knew must be made.
