Returned Soldier Appeals to The Bee to Find Him a Job

Disappointed in search for work, a recently discharged veteran has addressed the following plea to The Bee:

"I have been searching most diligently for work during the last 10 days and have filed my application with several different employment agencies. I am not at all particular as to what kind of a job I obtain so long as I am able to do the work. But almost every place I go I find women and girls are employed in the places of men. I guess the firms would rather retain the women because they pay them less than a man. They continue advertising for women as if war was still on and kept these women in jobs that are clearly men's, such as operating elevators in the large buildings.

"I am writing to protest against the policy of some employers who violate their pledges to the patriotic men to whom they promised jobs when they returned from the war."

Although the letter is signed, the writer requests his name be omitted. He is a veteran of two wars and served in the American expeditionary forces.
