W C BULLARD DIES FROM FALL DOWN STAIRS AT HOME

Lumber Man Instantly Killed While On His Way to First Floor Room—60 Years Old.

William C. Bullard, 60 years old, well known as one of Omaha's most prominent business men, was killed early yesterday by a fall down stairs from the second floor of his home, 700 North Fortieth street.

The coroner's physician, Dr. B. A. McDermott, announced the cause of death to be heart-shock brought on by the fall.

No inquest into the death will be held, the county attorney's office announced.

Body Found in Morning. The body, lying on a landing, was found by Harry Shedd, a son-in-law of the dead man. He made the discovery shortly before 7 yesterday morning.

Mr. Bullard attended a dinner party at the Carter Lake club and returned to his home at midnight. He spoke to members of the household when he came in. It is thought he might have heard a noise downstairs and descended to investigate it.

The body was cold when Mr. Shedd found it. Dr. McDermott said death was probably instantaneous and stated that Mr. Bullard had been dead five or six hours.

Romance of Business. His life story is a romance of big business. He came here 30 years ago from McCook, Neb., unacquainted and with meager funds.

His personal magnetism and a reputation for integrity drew to him a circle of influential acquaintances. He became affiliated with the Hoagland lumber interests and through other businesses engaged his time.

He still retained his partnership in the Bullard-Hoagland-Benedict Lumber Co.

He was president of the Prudential Building and Loan Co., secretary of the Omaha Sanitary Supply Co., a director in several other Omaha corporations, and owned a chain of lumber yards in small Nebraska towns. He is said to have accumulated a fortune of $500,000.

He was a member of the Omaha club, Field and Happy Hollow clubs; was a 32d degree Mason and a knight of Ak-Sar-Ben.

Mayor Smith, long a personal friend of Mr. Bullard and his legal adviser, was called to the home immediately after the body was found.

Mr. Bullard is survived by his son, W. C. Bullard, jr., and a daughter, Mrs. Josephine Ellingwood. His wife died two years ago, and another daughter, Madge, wife of Harry Shedd, was an influenza victim last winter.

Burial, for which complete arrangements have not yet been made, will be Sunday. The funeral may be in charge of the Masonic order.
