SHOTS FIRED IN THIEF CHASE IN COUNCIL BLUFFS

Man Held for Speeding Tries to Sell Machine—Runs When Officers Express Suspicion.

Twenty minutes after Motorcycle Officer W. H. Brown brought a big Haynes car to the Council Bluffs driver with speeding, the same car and driver figured in a sensational chase, during which Emergency Officer Barritt fired four shots and chased the man for half an hour through the heart of the city of Council Bluffs before catch-

At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon the big car was speeding on West to touch a 60-mile gait before he stopped its driver. At the station the man gave the name of Louie Freedman. He admitted he was going some," and put up a $20 cash bond for his appearance in police court this morning.

The officers noticed that he was nervous and seemed anxious to get wenty minutes later Floyd Jones and Barney Burnham, garage men at 117 Broadway, three blocks from the station, telephoned that a man was trying to sell a fine Haynes car at a cut price. Officer Barritt, who was not at the station when the speeder was brought in, witnessed the man's efforts to sell the car to Jones, who pretended a willingness to buy. Jones then invited the driver to go with him to the police station to see if the title of the car was clear, and Officer Barritt, who was in plain clothes, accompanied them.

The alleged owner of the car became suspicious before they had gone a block and leaped from the car with Barritt in pursuit. The street and through back yards, with Barritt taking a shot at the fugitive occasionally. At Fourth street and Willow avenue Jones and Burnham appeared with the car, picked up Barritt and resumed the chase in the car, catching the breathless fugitive on the south side of Bayliss

At the station the man gave the name of Frank Mitchell instead of Freedman. The car bears a Nebraska license and the officers say there is no doubt about it being

The fire was caused by a spark from the ignition button of an auto owned by Dr. J. Boston Hill, 1324 North Twenty-fourth street. Dr. Hill with two other physicians, drove up and asked for two gallons of gasoline from George W. Hunter, station attendant. The tank overflowed after a small amount had been put in and Dr. Hill and the attendant discussed whether or not it was really full. Meanwhile some of the gasoline became vaporized by the un's heat and a flame shot up from the dashboard. The car was soon in flames and set fire to the projecting roof of the station.

The insurance on the auto expired May 1. It was valued at $765 and is a total loss. Damage to the oil station is set at $500. Dr. Hill's clothes were scorched and his eyebrows burned.

OCAL interest in Moliere's family affairs does not run so very high but that a considerable number of our fellow-townsmen were able to deprive themselves of an evening of rare enjoyment at the Brandeis. If an industrious dramaargist were to evolve a three-act comedy from the doings of the dullest dolts who ever delved or span, and it were to be enacted by Henry Miller, Blanche Bates and the excellent players who are associated with them, then the occasion were sufficient warrant for attendance at the theater of all who appreciate and enjoy the finesse as well as the broader aspects of the actor's art. Such occasions are too few to be willfully neglected, if we are to give

Mr. Moeller has thrown around Moliere's last moments a glamor of romance that greatly relieves the drab accounts we find in history of his experience at the court, his quarrels with the priests, and his inability to survive the displeasure of the king. Mr. Miller has visualized the author's pictures with such smypathetic understanding as might suggest a deeper interest in the story of the actor-manager-author than will be ascribed to the natural desire to do a thing well. It is done with fine appreciation of every light and shadow of the story, regard for the nuances as well as for the big moments, preserving the undertone without neglect of the overtones, until it approaches perfection such scanty and not altogether promising material with so much of genuine interest is a tribute indeed to the ability of Henry Miller as a manager.

His performance of the name part is one of even excellence, smooth and carefully worked out in detail, as we have come to look for when he is before us. He is not meticulous, but he is painstaking, and disregards no touch, however light, that will add to the picture. but his judgement preserves him safe against overstepping at any

In this resides the charm of his acting, its poise, its finish, its evidence of care, and over it all that secret of real art that conceals artifice, the verisimiltude that destroys the effect of known assumption. Henry Miller is a master of his craft, not yet at his zenith, mounting higher and shining with a clearer light as he climbs. Blanche Bates has a role that calls for all her power of feeling and expressing a passion, deep, sweeping and consuming as it goes. No scene more poignant than her appeal as Montespan to Moliere has ever been watched in Omaha, no quiet despair more overwhelming han hers when she realized her failure, no hatred more venomous than that she vents in her determi nation to blast the man who spurned her passion. And the lighter mo-Collision With Automobile ments that lead up to this, when she spun the web in which she sought to hold the man she lusted or, her trepidation, her approach, all are proofs that she, too, serves that high place she has fairly won among American actresses.

Forrest Robinson's Colinge, David Glassford's king, Sidney Herbert as Fontaine. Alice Gale as the cook lets headquarters will be either in Catherine Calhoun Doucet's faithless wife are all admirable for conception and presentation. And the lesser roles are given with equal taste and certain effect, so that the Store to Schlitz Building whole may be justly set down as a singularly notable exhibition of the rue art of the actor.
