

First Lady of Land Gives Official Sanction to Uniform Worn by Red Cross Workers

Say Sailors Here Are Much More Attractive Than Those Worn in Nation's Capital.

By Peggy Nattinger.

The official uniform of the Omaha Red Cross canteen workers has received the sanction of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

"I admire your uniform so much," smiled the First Lady of the Land Monday morning as she sat in the C. N. Dietz car with the president. Praises Women's Uniforms.

"Your sailors are so pretty, much more attractive than those worn in Washington," Mrs. A. V. Arnold was the canteen worker who was addressed by Mrs. Wilson as she stood near the car.

A bit of the military was evident in the reception tendered Mrs. Wilson for she walked with the president between two long lines of soldiers, and canteen workers who gave a lusty cheer as she entered the station.

True Parisian Costume.

Just back from Europe Mrs. Wilson's costume was truly a bit Parisian. One might have expected tailored smartness of dark blue but instead the wife of the chief executive wore light blue voile, French hand embroidered, made with the long lines and a tiny vestee of white. The sleeves were short and long black silk gloves were worn. A large hat of black trimmed in blue silk and a white veil screened Mrs. Wilson's smile. Her extremely small feet were shod in white kid pumps with beaded buckles of white.

Motor Corps Lined Up.

Aside from Mrs. L. J. Healy's canteen corps, a number of the motor corps women were present to drive cars in the line of march. The young women in uniform included: Misses Frances Howells, Dorothy Judson, and Mesdames Herman Jobst, A. D. Dunn, Robert Rustin, J. H. Hauser and Porter Askew.

Along the line of march all the housewives came to greet the first lady of America. Some were gowned in fluffy frocks, but many had just left a Monday morning's work to wave a flag from the front window. The "Brownies" were also in evidence, so that there might be a snapshot of the presidential party for the family album.

Meets Mrs. Dietz.

Mrs. Wilson's charming manner was never more evident than when she stopped with the president to shake hands with Mrs. Leonora Dietz, mother of Gould Dietz, who sat on her porch waving a tiny flag. The old lady, with her crown of snowy hair, seemed to invoke a blessing on the chief executive and his beautiful wife as they bowed over her hand. After a few words, they hurried back to the car.

Hundreds of Nebraska's women surged to greet Mrs. Wilson immediately after the president's speech at the Auditorium. Mrs. Draper Smith, as chairman of the reception committee, endeavored to keep the receiving line moving, but the great crowds must be closer to America's first lady, and they climbed from chair to chair and from bench to bench to reach Mrs. Wilson.

Two Virginians Meet.

"Sister Wilson, I want to shake your hand," said Mrs. H. A. Aberly of the G. A. R. "I'm from Virginia, too."

"Are you?" questioned Mrs. Wilson, graciously, "I'm glad to meet you."

As Mrs. Wilson moved to pass from the building, the women streamed to the doors and windows to cheer her. Many climbed over the press table and it seemed as though a panic was imminent, but Mrs. Wilson remained unruffled, smiling and bowing despite the crowds which pressed against her.

Arriving at the station the First Lady paused outside the private car to speak to Mrs. Luther L. Kountze, who told her that she would find roses in the car, sent by the Omaha Woman's club. Mrs. Wilson smiled and thanked her, but declined an invitation to inspect the canteen at the station.

It was only a few moments, however, until she entered the car where she took off her hat and veil and opened the numerous boxes of flowers which were sent to her. She seemed to enjoy the blossoms, caressing the petals of the roses and reading the enclosed cards carefully. She also carried the bouquet of cosmos and ferns which had been thrown in the car on the way back to the train.

Chat With Spectators.

President and Mrs. Wilson enjoyed a little chat while the train waited. The president inspecting the flowers with her and reading the messages which came with them.

Mrs. Wilson glanced from the window to smile at a little golden haired girl who was lifted high in her father's arms for a glimpse. Mrs. Wilson's soft southern voice and her extremely calm manner will always be remembered by the Omahans who met her. Her tones are very musical and she hesitates between her words with a bit of a drawl. She sent a last flashing smile through the car window as the train pulled out, and waved her hand, a last goodbye to Omaha.

OPENING DAY SEES 25,000 CHILDREN AT OMAHA SCHOOLS

Shortage of Places for Teachers to Live Causes Anxiety.

The vast machinery of the Omaha public schools was set in motion yesterday for the coming year when more than 25,000 children again filled the school buildings with the cheerful noise and bustle of their presence and made the acquaintance of "dear teacher" again.

"The schools opened without a hitch," declared Superintendent Beveridge, who was at his office soon after 6 o'clock yesterday morning.

About 1,100 Teachers Employed. "We will, undoubtedly have a much larger enrollment than in any previous year, though we haven't the exact figures on hand. We have about 1,100 teachers, which is a greater number than ever before."

Dozens of teachers who were doing war work in Washington and elsewhere are back in the school rooms and therefore there is no shortage in the supply of teachers. The great shortage is in places for the teachers to live. Scores of them have not yet been able to find permanent homes and have been compelled to go to hotels temporarily.

Hard to Find Rooms.

Two young teachers who arrived in the city Saturday night, were unable to get even hotel accommodations. They inquired at five hotels before they finally secured a room. Yesterday they were shocked to learn that the hotel where they stayed has been raided by the morals squad several times in the last year.

Extensive improvements have been made in many of the school buildings during the summer and Superintendent Beveridge says they are all in fine shape now for the children. The most expensive improvement is the addition of half a block of ground to the playground of the Lake school at Twentieth and Lake streets.

Bee "Scoops" Town On the Presentation Of Wilson Speech

Like always, again yesterday The Bee "beat the town" on the presentation of the Wilson address and visit in Omaha to the public.

In the 12:30 edition, The Bee carried a complete story of the president's address, written by a special staff writer.

A complete story of the automobile parade, and a three-column picture of the president and the first lady of the land, taken by The Bee's staff photographer shortly after the president arrived, also was carried in this edition.

Every incident of the president's visit was completely reported by the small army of Bee reporters and special feature writers.

The Daily News printed less than a column and a half of well-formed words, but hardly anything on the Wilson speech, and the only news the paper announced to their readers was an eight-column headline reading "Auditorium Is Packed When Wilson Speaks."

The World-Herald carried only three insignificant paragraphs of the president's speech.

Last of Mayor's Food Will Be Sold In the City Hall Tonight

The last sad chapter in Mayor Smith's grand scheme of two weeks ago for numerous municipal stores throughout the city will be written, probably tonight, when the food which wasn't sold out in the Auditorium Saturday night will be sold in the rotunda of the city hall. The food is piled up in the rotunda now—about two truck loads. Dis-honest folks could help themselves. The food consists of hominy grits (everybody loves hominy grits) canned roast beef, canned bacon, canned corned beef and canned corned beef hash.
