

KINKAID URGES CONGRESS HELP POTASH OWNERS

Says Protection to Nebraska Industry Essential to Prevent Monopoly by Germany.

By E. C. SNYDER.
Washington, Sept. 22.—(Special Telegram.)—“Uncle Mose” Kinkaid, whose district, the big Sixth in Nebraska, contains the largest deposits of potash in the country so far developed, and the output of whose factories amounted to nearly 75 per cent of the domestic potash produced during the war, today took the house of representatives to his home state and showed in a carefully prepared speech what this infant industry means to the United States if properly protected. Close attention was given Judge Kinkaid throughout the presentation of the claims of the potash producers to consideration at the hands of the ways and means committee.

He told the house how it came about that Nebraska became one of the leading potash producing states and how the appeal of the heads of departments, the war trade board, the director of the bureau of mines, the director of the bureau of soils, and other officials to produce potash met with response from the pioneer potash producers in Nebraska and how California, Utah, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Georgia and other states responded to the cry for potash production, to offset the loss of the German article, in order that a famine of potassium salt, useful in peace and essential in war might be averted.

Quotes Potash Head.
Quoting W. E. Sharp, president of one of the largest potash companies in the country, Judge Kinkaid said: “Upwards of 6,000 of Nebraska citizens produced in their own hands quantities of potash. Great herds of men worked feverishly day and night to erect mammoth plants and thereafter to operate them.”

“Of the $50,000,000 invested in the potash industry in America upwards of $15,000,000 has been invested in plants and the development of the industry in the sandhills of western Nebraska,” said Judge Kinkaid. “In Nebraska there are nine large plants, and from 15 to 20 smaller plants. These plants have 200 miles of eight and six-inch pipeline with wells connected up. The largest potash plants cost all the way from $600,000 to $1,500,000 each and the 16 smaller plants all the way from $15,000 to $200,000, up to $100,000.”

“So far the Nebraska plants have yielded the largest potash production and now have a capacity of more than 100,000 tons of potash a year, with a number of additional large plants partly built when the armistice was signed. For the past six months of 1918 the Nebraska lakes yielded 43,219 tons of potash salts, equivalent to 10,232 tons of actual potash, which shows the progress and rapid development,” said Mr. Kinkaid in closing his address, which is by far the most complete presentation of the potash question made in this or any other congress.

Government Should Help.
Judge Kinkaid intimated that the government is morally obligated to safeguard this infant domestic potash industry “developed and advanced pursuant to the appeals made and the inducements held out by the administration so that we might win the war.” The alternatives are on the one hand, adequate restrictions upon importations from Germany, said “Uncle Mose,” “to permit of the development of the industry in America, or on the other, that we permit Germany to re-establish and enjoy a perpetual potash monopoly in the United States. Shall we have potash made in Germany or potash made in America? Shall we stand for the welfare of America or for the greater prosperity of Germany at the sacrifice of American potash producers and American labor? Shall we be for America or for Germany? For American industrial independence or for slavery to Germany?”

My HEART and My HUSBAND
Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

How Madge Held Steadfastly to Faith and Hope.
If I had not known little Mrs. Durkee so thoroughly, I perhaps should not have been so composed at the thrust she had given me concerning Dicky's visits to the Fairfax apartment. But I have become very well acquainted with my small friend's propensity for exaggeration, so at her remark I simply smiled at her teasingly, and held up an admonishing forefinger.

“Now less up!” I said sternly. “On your honor, now! Did Alfred say specifically that he had seen a lot of Dicky over at the Fairfaxes?” She squirmed in her chair as an uneasy kitten might have done. “He said he'd seen a lot of Dicky,” she declared defiantly. “And if that doesn't mean over at the Fairfaxes, I don't know what does, for from the things Alfred let drop I know Alf's there more than half the time.” I laughed and blew her a kiss. “You little fraud!” I said good-naturedly. “If the boys could hear you they would declare your imagination is working overtime again.” She pouted resentfully, even as her pretty laugh bubbled from her lips. It is a tense and tragic mood indeed for little Mrs. Durkee when she cannot greet everything with a laugh.

“I don't understand you at all, Madge,” she asserted. “If Dicky were my husband and staying down town for a month or two, and gallivanting around with a pretty girl, I'd—I'd satchel him bald-headed!” “No, you wouldn't,” I returned, composedly, snipping a thread from a pair of pink “creepers” I was making for my small son, who, in a walking chair—a cleverly constructed framework on wheels which allows baby to stretch his limbs and go through the movements of walking without bearing his whole weight upon his immature muscles—was ambling all over the screened veranda. “You'd be a sensible lady, as I am, and realize that when there is an unusual stress of work on hand a man has to stay in the city, and you wouldn't object to his calling on his friends or even taking them out to dinner or the theater.” It cost me an effort to say this calmly and pleasantly. First, because dear friend as little Mrs. Durkee is, I inwardly resented her strictures upon my affairs. And second, because I was by no means as complacent over the news she had brought me as I outwardly appeared.

Not that I ever again could be really jealous of Edith Fairfax. That she still hopelessly loved Dicky I was sure, although her work had broadened her horizon so that she would never again be as unhappy over him as she had been. But during the time following Dicky's airplane accident, vision had been given me to see many things, and among them was the glorious truth that despite all his volatile unstableness my husband's heart was supremely mine.

I was not idiotic enough to believe that I never would face the danger of losing him, but I knew that his fancy would never be entangled by a girl of Edith Fairfax's type, rather colorless nature. The rare beauty, the imperious ways, the touch of diablerie of the Grace Draper type of girl would always spell danger, at least temporarily for me. But our marital love had weathered one such test, and I resolutely shut my eyes to the possibility of another. And as for idle, graceful attentions from Dicky to his studio friends, I had long since made up my mind that I would waste neither time nor emotion in needless thought over them.

But it is one thing to resolve, another to carry out that resolve, not only in the letter, but in the spirit. So, while I was able to keep my face composed, my hands from trembling, yet any wife will understand that my brain did not exactly enjoy the pictures which little Mrs. Durkee's words had flashed upon it. Inconsistently, selfishly also, I must admit, I would rather have visual-

KOLCHAK QUITS AS GOVERNMENT LEADER AT OMSK

Commander of Anti-Red Forces Relinquishes Position in Favor of General Denekine.

London, Sept. 22.—Admiral Kolchak, head of the All-Russian government at Omsk, has informed the allies that he resigns the title of chief ruler in favor of General Denekine, leader of the anti-bolshevik forces in southern Russia, according to a wireless dispatch sent out by the soviet government at Moscow.

The message admits the bolsheviks have abandoned Kurak after severe fighting against General Denekine's troops.

Husband Says Wife Holdup; Judge Fines Him in Court
When Patrolman Caldwell responded to a call at Twenty-fourth and Cuming streets at 2 yesterday morning stating that a “red-haired woman” had held up Glenn Florea, 29 years old, 1411 Chicago street, he glanced once at Mrs. Florea, the woman in the case, then arrested her husband for drunkenness.

In police court Florea was fined $10 and costs. According to his story, he was held up by his wife, assaulted by her escort and robbed of his gold watch chain. The wife's story is different.

“He is just trying to cause me trouble,” she testified in police court. “I went to Krug park with a girl friend and was escorted home by a man named Jewell when we met my husband. My escort ran.”

Jugo-Slavs Try to Land on the Dalmatian Coast
London, Sept. 22.—An attempt by Jugo-Slav forces to land on the Dalmatian coast is reported in official dispatches reaching here regarding the Adriatic controversy, in which Fiume is the storm center. The landing was frustrated by the Italian naval and military authorities.

ized my husband sulking in his studio over our disagreement than having to picture him making a joyous Fourth in the outfit of Alfred Durkee and the Fairfax girls.

And, despite my outward composure, little Mrs. Durkee was shrewd enough to read my thoughts.

CHARGE ILLINOIS SENATOR WITH SMUGGLING BEER

Most of 14 Others Held to Grand Jury on Like Charge Are Chicago Saloon Keepers.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—Federal Judge Landis held 14 men, one of them a state senator, to the grand jury in his investigation of alleged beer smuggling from Wisconsin into Illinois.

State Senator Patrick J. Carroll was held when he declined to reply to questions by the judge. His name had been mentioned by witnesses Saturday when Judge Landis, instituting his campaign against alleged illegal interstate traffic in liquor, held 17 men to the grand jury.

All of the others held, with the exception of John C. Niederprimg, head of a brewery agency at Kenosha, Wis., were Chicago and suburban saloon keepers.

“Where do you sell it?” asked Judge Landis.

“Here in Chicago,” replied the witness.

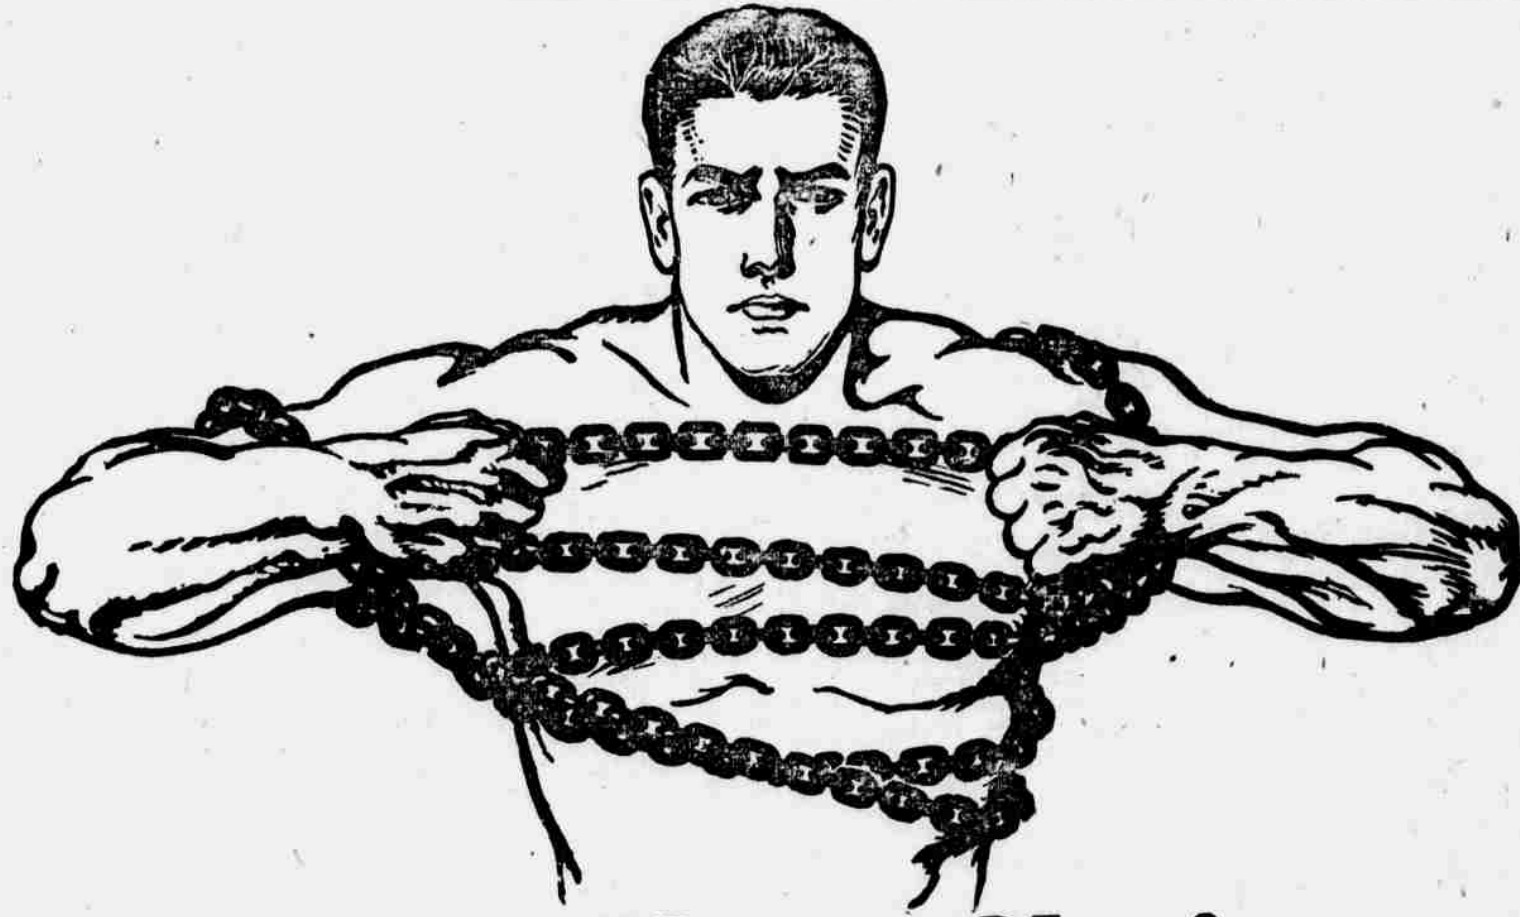

“Have you got a record of the people to whom you sold such beer?”

General Harries to Return to Omaha for Ak-Sar-Ben

Brig. Gen. George H. Harries, the only general from this state in the world war, telegraphed W. D. McHugh from Washington that he is planning to visit Omaha soon.

Mr. McHugh expects the general will be here during the Ak-Sar-Ben season. The distinguished Nebraskan returned last week from overseas, where he spent nine months in Berlin with the army of occupation.

Break Your Chains Be Strong and Well

Why drag along through life—half-sick, weak and tired out all the time. You can be strong and well—full of energy and vitality—glowing with health, and thrilled with the joy of life. You can enjoy life.

Rich, healthy blood makes the whole body healthy. Nature intended that everyone should be strong and well, and there is no mystery about Nature's laws.

REOLO Makes Rich Red Blood

If the supply of oxygen is not sufficient, the engine runs down, vital force wanes, the fire goes out, and the whole machinery of the body stops. When the blood is vitalized with oxygen, the complicated structure of the cells of the body is broken down, and the energy liberated which serves to drive the human engine.

REOLO acts on the blood, and by constantly cleansing and revitalizing it converts the blood into a vigilant guard against the insidious attacks of disease. It assists every natural force in the body. It makes it possible for the blood to build up what the stress of daily activity, overwork, over-exertion and overtaking of the body tears down. Waste products are cast out—new cells grow—the hollow cheeks fill out and take on the ruddy glow of health. The spring comes back to the step, the whole body tingles with health and vitality—and the brain is cleared to meet the battle with the problems of life.
