

MOVIES OF RIOT NOT TO BE SHOWN IN LOCAL HOUSES

Local Film Company Photographer Takes Series of Pictures Showing Stages of Disorders Sunday.

During all the disorder and rioting of Sunday night C. E. Schmidt of the Chenoweth Film company, 1306 Farnam street, risked his life with a camera to "shoot" pictures of the firing of the court house, the lynching of Will Brown, negro, and the reckless shooting of the mob.

In one instance eight men held Schmidt above the heads near the north entrance of the court house in order that authentic pictures of the fray might be snapped.

At the request of officials of the Chamber of Commerce the pictures will not be shown in Omaha. Already theaters in Des Moines, Sioux City, Lincoln, Kearney, Columbus, Atlantic, Ia., and Council Bluffs have received prints of the lynching and are showing them.

City officials in Grand Island refused to allow the pictures to be shown there because of racial feeling existing there, according to a telegram received by Schmidt from S. A. Hayman, manager of a theater in that city.

By noon Monday, prints of the pictures were on their way to New York City to be shown there, providing they are permitted.

"The films are in favor of law enforcement and for the betterment of the community," Mr. Schmidt declared.

Scenes of Mayor Smith taken 10 days ago are also depicted in the print. Taking of the fire scene of the court house was a difficult task, Schmidt said, because of the darkness. However, the night scene is shown plainly in the pictures.

Treacherous Moros Taught Severe Lesson By Pershing In Slaughters at Fort Bacolod

Bamboo Bridges Thrown Over Ditch and Place Carried by Hand-to-Hand Assault.

After the Macui campaign Pershing decided to postpone further movement against hostile Moros in the hope that they would profit by the experiences of those whom he had vanquished. And the vanquished, as the hostile Moros well knew, were not confined to those against whom the two expeditions had been directed. Before even the first expedition Pershing had arrested the Sultan of Binidayan; and the sultan, going juramentado, was killed.

Letters were sent, after the Macui campaign, to the east lake and Bacolod Moros, giving them every opportunity to come to friendly terms. They were told that even though previously hostile they might visit Camp Vicars and that the United States government, as represented by Pershing, would welcome a change in their hostile attitude. Several Moros on the eastern side of the lake took advantage of the opportunity, including Raja Nurul Caquim, who controlled a number of rancherias. He told his people that they must not interfere with the Americans under penalty of severe punishment. Moros from Butig and Bayabao also called at Camp Vicars and declared that they wished no more war.

Nothing of a friendly nature, however, was heard from Bacolod.

Recognized By Moros.

Meantime, in November, Pershing, under escort of Amai-Manibilaang and some of his people, crossed the lake in vintas with 150 men. He visited several towns, among them Madaya and Marahui and proceeded thence to Ligan, returning to Camp Vicars over the same route. Pershing was shown every attention, especially at Madaya and also at Marahui, where, on market day, a large conference was held attended by some 500 Moros from all sections of the lake. Pershing was received with marked deference and the Moros acclaimed him widely as a datus in comparison with whom all other datus were as nothing.

"The actual leader of the hostile Moros was an old pandita by the name of Sajiduciaman, reported Pershing. Knowing his friendship for Amai-Manibilaang and one or two others, I summoned them to Camp Vicars to aid me in bringing him to see the folly of further resistance.

"An interview was finally arranged, at which he and I agreed to be personal friends, but he claimed to be unable to give any assurances as to the future action of his people.

"In January, his followers began to interfere with the Moros employed by us and a campaign was decided on.

Attack On Bacolod.

"The plan was to attack Bacolod from the north, and to do this it was necessary to rather keep up in the hills, where we had to work our way very slowly.

"On reaching Bacolod Hill, about 4 o'clock, a very heavy rain set in, which considerably delayed the advance, especially of the artillery. The leading company was moved down Bacolod ridge toward the fort in skirmish line, and was received with a heavy fire of lantacas and small arms. Advancing to within 300 yards, one company was placed across the ridge and one moved to the right and another to the left, so as to partially envelop the fort. One section of the artillery having arrived, firing began in earnest on both sides.

Hoist White Flag.

"At about 9 o'clock a. m. the Moros inside the fort ceased firing and hoisted a white flag, the Panandungan of Bacolod himself requesting terms of surrender. They were informed that nothing but unconditional surrender would be accepted, and that as prisoners their lives would be well treated. They declined these terms, desiring to keep their arms and to remain in the fort.

"The effective work of the mountain artillery had already practically destroyed the embrasures and portholes on the north and east faces of the fort, and we soon reached a stage when all that remained to be done was to make the final assault. It was necessary, however, to remain at Bacolod until the following day, awaiting the arrival of supply pack trains sent to Vicars. Moreover, in order to avoid loss of life I was very desirous of forcing the Moros to surrender, and for these reasons concluded to delay the assault until the following day in the hope that they would finally give up. Fresh troops were sent to the firing line, which was strengthened at night, and the utmost precautions taken that none should escape from the fort and no reinforcements enter. Early the morning of the 8th the Panandungan again asked for and was granted a conference, which, however, resulted as before.

Fought Hand-to-Hand.

"Material for filling the ditch was prepared at once, and detailed instructions were given to the officers of the assaulting lines to be composed of Company C, 27th infantry, under Lieutenant Shaw; Troop L, 15th cavalry, dismounted under Captain Kirkpatrick, and one Maxine gun, under Captain McNair. All in readiness, the infantry advanced toward the east face of the fort, and the cavalry, with the mountain gun between the two platoons, the north face.

"Under the protection of the fire of this line the ditch at the point of crossing opposite the middle of the east face, was filled with fallen trees, and a bamboo bridge was thrown across by Company M, Twenty-seventh Infantry, and Troop A, Fifteenth Cavalry, under Lieutenants Gracie and Lear, respectively. Lieutenant Peek, Engineer, immediately directing the work. Within 20 minutes this was accomplished without casualty, and men of Company C, Company M and Troop A, hurriedly crossed to the berme and sprung upon the parapet, encountering Moros in hand-to-hand combat, who rushed with campilans and kris from the berm galleries and interior of the fort to meet them.

Moros Slaughtered.

"Three men were wounded almost instantly, but short work was made of the remaining Moros, who in all parts of the fort continued to fight desperately to the death. The plan of assault was executed in every detail. It was a brilliant action and one never to be forgotten by those who engaged, and the gallantry displayed by our troops has seldom been equaled.

"It is said that there were in the beginning over 200 Moros in the fort, several of whom escaped the first day and night, and just before the assault the number was put at from 50 to 100. Sixty Moros were found dead at the fort and trenches, among those killed being the Panandungan of Bacolod, the leader of opposition to the Americans; Datto Macassas, Datto Tundia, Datto Antao, and several others of less importance.

Weapons In Ashes.

"On account of the danger from cholera, a minute inspection of the interior was not deemed safe, and the fort was at once ordered burned. Many rifle barrels and kris blades were found in the ashes, together with six cannons and seven lantacas, which were destroyed with gunpowder. "Our casualties in the Bacolod fight previous to the attack on the

MILD WEATHER IS PROTECTION TO COURT HOUSE

Repair Work Being Rushed—People Should Regard Ruins as Object Lesson, Says Official.

The mild weather is considered a "god-send" in the present unprotected condition of the ruined court house.

Work is proceeding rapidly on replacing the windows. In dozens of places temporary windows are being installed two feet back of the regular windows so as not to interfere with the placing of the regular frames and windows. Where only the window panes have been broken they are being replaced and within three or four days the building will be protected from the weather.

Dozens of steam radiators have been broken off and the pipes are being plugged temporarily so that the building will be protected from the weather.

The dimensions of Fort Bacolod included within the walls of the parapet were about 80 by 100 feet. The walls were 12 feet high, 15 feet thick at the base, and faced with stone on the outside. A berm 12 feet wide extended entirely around the fort, under which were constructed galleries, and both the fort and berme were covered with abutment and earth. The fort proper and the galleries were used as a dwelling by the family of the Panandungan and many of his people. The parapet was loopholed for rifle fire, and contained embrasures for cannon and lantacas and a series of bamboo loopholes extended entirely around the edge of the berme for rifle fire from the galleries.

steam can be turned on at the earliest moment in order to dry out the interior of the building.

Must Replace Cables.

The elevators are in bad condition, the cables having been so badly burned that they must be replaced. Within a few days the workmen expect to have one of the elevators running.

The county assessor has established a temporary office in the employment bureau office on the ground floor. The employment bureau has been moved to the city hall.

Entrance is permitted only at the east door and only to those having passes. County Commissioner O'Connor declared yesterday that the public should be admitted to see the ruin as an object lesson. "If the people could see the interior of that building, it would be a great deterrent to a revival of the wild mob spirit in the future," he said.

Clerks Patiently Wait.

Work of restoring the county treasurer's office is being pushed so rapidly that it is hoped to put in temporary windows and floors and have the room in temporary condition in a few days. This office is now on the fourth floor temporarily, but work has not started because of lack of desks, the fact that all the remaining records are in the vault, of the old office, and the further fact that the temporary office is on the fourth floor with no elevators running. The employees of the office sit in the halls waiting for quarters.

Charwoman Saves Judge Estelle From Threatened Attack

Nora McCarthy, a charwoman at the court house, saved District Judge Estelle from threatened assault at the hands of one of the rioters Sunday night. The aged judge was standing on Seventeenth street watching the court house fire. Mrs. McCarthy was there also and the judge was telling about the Cincinnati riots of 1863.

A young man took exception to some of his remarks and reached for his hip pocket, with the exclamation, "I'll fix you!" Mrs. McCarthy, who is a large, strong woman, grabbed the young fellow's hand and explained to him how the judge was. The threatened assault was averted.

Another Robbery Reported.

The Omaha Harness company store, 318 South Thirteenth street, was reported Wednesday as one of the places broken into the night of the riot. Leather puttees, razor straps and bill cases were taken worth about $100.

Thieves Get $400 in Loot.

Two thieves entered the apartment of J. F. Morgan, 324 South Twenty-fourth street, Wednesday afternoon by a pass key and stole women's clothing, jewelry and suit cases to the value of $400.
