Use Easy "Gets-It"

Any Corn or Callus Comes Off Peacefully, Gloriously. Never Fails.

It is easy for "Gets-It" to reach "hard-to-get-at" corns, and better yet, it is easy to remove them, because "Gets-It" makes them come right off just like a banana.

Any Corn Peels Off With "Gets-It."

peel. You can try to dig or drag out your corns with a knife, or slice them with a "bloody" razor, or use bandages and tape and wrap up your toe into a package, but that's the "treat-em-rough," painful foolish way. Use 2 or 3 drops of "Gets-It"—that's the peaceful, sure, common-sense way that never fails. You reach the corn easily with the little glass rod in the cork of every "Gets-It" bottle. It does not hurt the true flesh. Try it, trot and smile! It's a blessing; never fails.

"Gets-It" is the only sure, guaranteed, money-back corn-remover with a trial at any drug store. M'fd by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago, Ill.

Gov. General Harrison Supplants Pershing to Regret of All Familiar With Conditions

Captain Archibald Butt, military aide to President Taft, who was an usher at Gen. Pershing's wedding.

Even Pacified Moros, Appreciating the Strong and Just Hand Which Ruled and Protected Them, Pass Resolutions for U. S. Congress—Last Campaign of General Wiped Out Band of Murderers That Terrorized Hill Country—Pershing Gets Into Mexican Broil.

In 1913 Pershing attained the result for which he so long had striven—peace in the Moro province.

The actual attainment did not come until late in the year, but all real trouble in the province may be said to have ended June 11, with the battle of Bagsak—the last battle the Moro province ever knew. It is best told in Pershing's own words. I quote an excerpt from his report:

"The late autumn of 1912 arrived, but the Moros of Latiward still held out. The brigands resumed their criminal pursuits and sent their warriors to run amuck against our troops. When the military forces began to make preparations to chastise them, they retired to Mount Bagsak, taking with them practically the entire population of Latiward, numbering from 6,000 to 10,000 souls.

"This assemblage of people, nine-tenths of whom were noncombatants, including women and children, presented an appeal to humanity that far outweighed the immediate demand for the enforcement of disarmament orders, or for the apprehension of the lawbreakers and criminals among them responsible for this gathering.

"To avoid the serious consequences to the Moros of a clash under these conditions, very earnest appeals were made to induce them to listen to reason and go back to their deserted fields. Eventually an agreement was reached that all Moros should return to their homes and lay down their arms, and that our troops should be withdrawn from that part of the island (Jolo).

"Most of the women and children and unarmed men from Mount Bagsak went down to their farms and began planting their crops, and there was much apparent cause for again indulging in the hope of a peaceful settlement.

"Never Surrender."

"These hopes were short-lived, as the leaders and most of their armed men not only failed to disperse, but kept their followers and families continuously in readiness to be assembled on Mount Bagsak upon the slightest rumor of a movement against them.

In order to allay all suspicions and if possible to hold the populace in their fields apart from the outlaws, all intention on our part of even an ultimate resort to force was positively disavowed. Efforts did not cease until the outlaw conferees openly declared that they would never lay down their arms.

"The only principle for which they fought was the right to pillage and murder without molestation from the government.

"By this time the separation of the noncombatants from the desperadoes and criminals had been practically accomplished. Without further delay and without warning the troops were called out.

Savages Surprised.
"By a swift movement, Mount Bagsak was reached the morning of June 11. The defenders of that mountain stronghold were caught unawares with most of their noncombatant followers absent and a very severe, though well-deserved, punishment was administered.

"Our course has met with the approval of the entire population of the Sulu archipelago. This Bagsak band of outlaws included some of the most notorious cattle thieves and murderers that have ever infested the island. They had defied the officers of the law, fought the troops and opposed every attempt to establish order."

Governor General Harrison held a conference with General Bell and Pershing at Malacca on Friday night, October 25, lasting until 12 o'clock. Upon assurances given him by these generals, he concluded it would be advisable to proceed as promptly as possible with the substitution of civilian and constabulary for military persons, wherever the latter were participating in civil government.

Necessary action to expedite this course followed without delay. November 9, Governor General Harrison and General Bell left Manila for a trip to Moro province. Every part of the province was visited. The governor general explained at audiences granted the populace that Pershing was to retire as governor at the end of the year and that a civilian was to be appointed. Regret was expressed by all.

Pershing Is Regretted.

Later this regret took concrete form. A few days after Pershing had resigned and on December 15 sailed for the United States, the legislative council of the Moro province adopted these resolutions:

"Whereas, Brig.-Gen. John J. Pershing's firm handling of a complicated and difficult situation has resulted in a gradual elimination of the outlaw and hostile element in Moro province, so that today the province enjoys peace and prosperity to an extent which has hitherto been unknown; now, therefore, by the legislative council of the Moro province, be it

"Resolved, That this body, recognizing the important achievements which marked his dual course as provincial governor and commander of the District of Mindanao, hereby makes of record and conveys to him its high appreciation of the skill with which he has guided the affairs of the province to its present condition of development and tranquillity."

The Mexican Broil.

His work in the Philippines as commanding general of the Department of Mindanao and as governor of the Moro province complete, Brigadier-General Joseph J. Pershing returned to the United States, only to find even more arduous duties awaiting him.

Mexico, that country of revolutions, was in the throes of the Huerta reign of terror. Each day added to the gravity of the situation. Dire eventualities impended. The United States was concentrating its forces on the border and intervention seemed practically certain.

Pershing At the Border.

Wilson, on assuming office, refused to recognize Huerta as the head of the Mexican government, in spite of the fact that such recognition had been granted by Great Britain. At the same time the Maderistas, rallied under Venustiano Carranza, governor of Coahuila, and Francisco Villa, declared against Huerta. Also, at the same time, our ambassador to Mexico, Henry Lane Wilson, was withdrawn from Mexico City.

Pershing was ordered to take command of the Eighth brigade on the border, and on January 20, 1914, he established his headquarters at Fort Bliss, near El Paso, Tex. He continued in this command until March 15, 1916, when he was made commander of the expeditionary forces which went into Mexico after Villa.

What the Doctors Found Out About American Men

The Physical examination of nearly 10,000,000 young men—by the Draft Boards during the war—startled and amazed the doctors.

In the first draft, the doctors rejected 28% of the men examined—out of 5,000,000 young men drawn from every part of the country.

In the second draft the Provost Marshal General's report shows that 29.51 per cent of the men examined, had marked and disqualifying defects.

The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service says: "The figures from all sections of the country are sufficiently appalling to show that it is of the greatest importance, for the whole nation to realize, that it's high time to search out the causes of this physical unfitness, and find the proper remedies."
