Drama League Hears that Literature Mothers a Brand New Child

"I am neither prosecuting attorney nor advocate for the plaintiff," said Miss Kate McHugh, speaking of polyphonic prose before the Drama League at Hotel Blackstone Monday afternoon.

The exponent of this new form under discussion is Amy Lowell who wrote "Can Grande's Castle" from which Miss McHugh read "Hedge Island." The reading effect proved to be musical, "orchestral rather than melodic." The rhymes do not run regularly.

A splendid gathering of 200 women heard Miss McHugh in her delightful presentation. "One hundred new members were enrolled today," said Mrs. Lucien Stephens, chairman of membership.

John Cowper Powys was announced for October 27, and Lord Dunsany for November 17. Mrs. Burns said no definite word regarding entertainment of the players in "Seventeen" could be given at present.

And the Hairpin Is King

With a hairpin, all that is doable can be done. With a hairpin, a woman can pick a lock, pull a cork, peel an apple, draw out a nail, beat an egg, see if a joint of meat is done, do up a baby, sharpen a pencil, dig out a sliver, fasten a door, hang up a plate or a picture, open a can, take up a carpet, repair a baby carriage, clean a lamp chimney, put up a curtain, rake a grate fire, cut a pie, make a fork, a fishhook, an awl, a gimlet or a chisel, a papercutter, a clothespin, regulate a range, tinker a sewing machine, stop a leak in a roof, turn a flapjack, caulk a hole in the gas meter, keep bills and receipts on file, cut patterns, tighten windows, clean watches, untie a knot, varnish floors, do practical plumbing, pry shirt studs into buttonholes too small for them, fix a horse's harness, restore damaged mechanical toys, wrestle with refractory bottle stoppers, improvise suspenders, shovel bombons, inspect gas burners, saw cake, jab traps, produce artificial buttons, hooks and eyes, sew, knit and darn button gloves and shoes, put up awnings and doctor an automobile. In short, she can do what she wants to; she needs no other instrument. The hairpin is king.

Birch for the Bedroom

With prices soaring like birds on the wing, we are perplexed as to what kind of furniture to choose for the bedroom. It used to be that there was no difficulty in finding a suite of furniture within our means but now sometimes the prices are fairly staggering, and we pause and wonder about substitutes, such as coats and shirtwaist boxes, but we find that they are soaring upward, too.

And then, along about this time, we stumble into a delightful bedroom suite of chromewald birch that has all the charming qualities of the older, more expensive suites: it is of good lines, showing plain, dignified spaces; it is well designed and lovely in color; it is substantial in character and yet, if one may also use this term, it is delicately proportioned. And the price is most moderate compared with other things one sees.

This furniture of birch is coming into a well-deserved popularity, not only because it is beautiful and inexpensive, but because it is so durable. It comes in a dull-toned brown very similar to the darker tones of American walnut, in a beautiful ivory enamel, in blue, in gray and in a combination of either of these with brown. It is scarp-proof and can be washed with good, honest soap and water. What more could you ask of furniture?

A bedroom is capable of being one of the prettiest rooms in the house if it is treated as it should be. The bed should be covered tastefully, and this usually means dispensing with the kind of counterpane mostly seen. Instead of this the bed should be covered with a plain-colored material or a cretonne, either untruffed and clearing the floor by about five or six inches, or with a flounce made floor length. The pillow should be encased in a daytime cover, either of the same material or a contrasting one.

If covers are used on the bureau, dressing table and chiffonier, which are not at all necessary, they should not hang over at the ends. A wicker chair or so is a happy addition to the bedroom, but rockers have no place here. Cretonne in the windows is not only effective, but pleasing to live with. The walls of a bedroom should be plain and light and untrimmed. This leaves opportunity for all sorts of

Beans--- Just Guinea Beans

Mrs. W. T. Wiley is one Omaha woman who has successfully solved the H. C. L. It is the New Guinea butter bean which has aided her. Just imagine one bean serving a family three or four meals! You can if you notice the above beans. One of them measures 30 inches in length and is 15 inches in circumference. The vines are seven to 10 feet in height. Mrs. Wiley sent to and without staining the hands, every particle of the pulp can be separated from the seeds.

Seedless Jam. In making seedless jam of blackberries a great saving may be effected by passing the berries, which have been previously cooked soft, through an ordinary rotary flour sifter.

To Prevent Burning. When bread or pastry is in danger of burning a basin of cold water set on the upper grate protects the bread and lowers the temperature, and is much better than covering with paper or leaving the door open.
