

LOVETT LEAVES OMAHA ON TRIP OF INSPECTION

Head of Harriman System Predicts Great Things for City—Visit Here Indicates No Changes.

Robert S. Lovett, president of the Harriman transportation system, left at 9 yesterday morning for Salt Lake City on an inspection trip, after spending two days in Omaha. He was accompanied by Mrs. Lovett, Miss M. C. Bean, E. E. Adams, consulting engineer of the Union Pacific railroad; E. E. Calvin, federal manager of the Union Pacific; J. Di Farrel, vice president of the Harriman system, and H. M. Adams, vice president of traffic of the Union Pacific.

During his stay here Mr. Lovett inspected the Union Pacific railroad shops and the terminal facilities in Omaha and Council Bluffs. As guest of the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday noon he gave a short talk on the future of the American railroads when returned to private ownership, predicting a policy of extreme conservatism.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Lovett attended the grand opera at the Auditorium Tuesday night. Mr. Lovett also found time, during his short stay to study economic conditions in Omaha and before leaving predicted great things for the city.

Mr. Lovett and his party will proceed to Salt Lake City and to the west coast. The inspection trip is expected to last for from 4 to 6 weeks. Officials of the Union Pacific in Omaha say Mr. Calvin will return east by way of Kansas City, Mo. No important conferences were held during the president's visit, officials say, and nothing will be changed on the system at the present time.

My HEART and My HUSBAND Revelations of a Wife

What Alice Holcombe Told Madge.

Alice Holcombe looked up at me wistfully, her lips quivering. "Forgive me," she pleaded. "I know I'm getting everything mixed up. I—I don't know what is the matter with me."

"I won't forgive you if you talk that way, I retorted with a grimace. I was far from feeling. You're simply upset by something you've heard, and the quickest way out is to tell me all about it. Come now, you didn't know this when you went to Patchogue, so you must have heard it there since yesterday. So you won't have to go very far back in your memory. Now, when? Where? How? as we use to tell the children in the composition classes."

"I have a young cousin who is an operator in the Bayview telephone exchange," she began obediently, slowly. "I have not seen her for some time, but she came out to Patchogue yesterday for a weekend visit. She is usually a very merry girl, and I was surprised to find her exceedingly sober of demeanor. I caught her studying me covertly several times, and at last this morning she evidently made up her mind to a definite course of action, for she manoeuvred to get me alone and then asked me earnestly:

"Cousin Alice, what do you really think about the Stockbridge case? Do you think Mr. Stockbridge killed his wife?"

"The question nearly made me lose control of myself. But I have been schooling my feelings lately, trying not to betray too much my horror at the thought that any one should suspect Kenneth, for I find that many of my best friends do not think as I do about it. So I waited until I could answer her calmly before I spoke.

An Unsuspected Shock.

"I am sure that he didn't," I told her. "As sure of his innocence as I am of yours or my own."

"You're one of his oldest friends, aren't you?" she went on, looking at me curiously. "Would it make you very unhappy if he were found guilty?"

"I answered her promptly. 'Yes, to both questions,' I said, and she nodded her head gravely as if I only had confirmed her own thought.

"Then I know what to do," she said thoughtfully, and a minute later she added something which frightened me.

"Can you get a warning to Mr. Stockbridge?" she asked.

"I can I answered knowing that I could relay it through Kenneth's attorneys. I did not think it wise to tell her that Kenneth had requested that neither you nor I should attempt to see him."

Miss Holcombe paused and looked up at us as if asking assurance that she had acted wisely.

"You did just right," I said.

"I thought you'd approve," she answered simply, then went on with her story.

"Will They Tell?"

"My cousin told me that both she and another operator had listened in on the telephone that afternoon both when Milly telephoned you and when Kenneth did."

I struggled hard to keep my face expressionless. If these girls had indeed heard everything, and should tell what they knew, then the plight of all of us was sad indeed. Alice Holcombe and I would surely be brought into the case, and I dared not acknowledge even to myself how damning to Kenneth Stockbridge would be the evidence I would be compelled to give.

I forced my stiff lips to speech.

"Will they tell what they know?" I asked.

"The other girl has, already," Alice Holcombe answered, "but fortunately she had a busy board that afternoon, and she heard but very little. She has been given a good sum of money for the little bit she did hear, and both she and the lawyers employed by Milly's family have been pestering my cousin to tell her story. But so far she has kept quiet—she is not the kind of a girl to sell her knowledge—and they have no idea how much she knows. And now I am sure she is safe. She has promised me that she will not only keep from telling what she heard, but will persist in saying that she really heard nothing more than did the other girl. She even refused to tell me what she had heard."

I drew a breath of relief. I could understand the reluctance of Alice's young cousin to repeat the venomous words concerning her which Milly Stockbridge had uttered to me that afternoon.

Glad indeed was I also that my friend had not discovered the fact of Kenneth Stockbridge's confiding his private papers to me. I was not sure just how she would take that bit of news. But I was troubled at the thought of the dynamite which her young cousin possessed, for I did not quite share my friend's confidence in her young relative's discretion.

I feared that a girl who would "listen in" would also capitalize her knowledge.
