The top picture is the one sent The Bee by telegraph within an hour or so after it was taken in New York, and reproduced Sunday.

Rural Communities Organize to Help In Red Cross Work

Organization for Red Cross work in rural communities has been started in all parts of the country under the direction of E. L. Morgan, director of the bureau of rural organization.

Included in the program mapped out for this work are lectures in all training institutes, creation of small town laboratories in training centers where practical rural work can be given, advice to field workers on rural problems, development of chapter courses on things to be done, community studies on the peace program, exchange of plans with other agencies, meeting with farmers in their various county and state meetings and granges.

Former soldiers, sailors and marines who have incurred disabilities in line of duty which have necessitated major amputations, such as the loss of a hand or foot, both hands or both feet, or loss of sight of one or both eyes, and who are desirous of taking vocational training, can now have their applications acted on within 24 hours, according to a bulletin received yesterday at the army building in Omaha.

Heretofore all applications for training were referred from the district vocational office to the federal board at Washington for action. Under the new system all of these applications are acted on by traveling field representatives, who have been sent out from Washington.

These representatives cover the entire country and visit each vocational board at least once every two weeks, at which time all cases in the district office are cleared up. The only cases which such traveling representatives must refer to Washington are those involving courses for a period longer than two years. On these the Washington office will give a decision within 10 days.
