Peace Petitions.
More than 2,500 signatures were secured to the peace petitions Tuesday by women working in the downtown stores. Further work in the stores will be discontinued owing to the Red Cross drive, but petitions will be available at the Elks' club, the Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus club and War Camp Community. Persons who have signed petitions in their possession are requested to send them not later than Friday to Mr. Lyle I. Abbott, McCague building. The petitions must be forwarded to Senator Hitchcock by Saturday, November 3, in order to be of any value. Mrs. Draper Smith says reports from out in the state, while not complete, indicate satisfactory progress.

A Bride's Query.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I read your advice in The Omaha Bee, so am coming to you for advice, too. I am to be married this month and would like to know if jewelry could be worn on the wedding day and what color, and what goods should the wedding dress be made?

Must a girl wear a wreath on her head, or could she wear only a flower in her hair on the wedding day?
Please answer these questions for me and am thanking you in advance.
A. B.

Jewelry may be worn with propriety on one's wedding day. Very often the bride chooses to wear only a single piece—the gift of the groom—except, of course, the wedding and engagement rings. The bride's dress may be of the color and kind she wishes to have usually if she is married in her traveling costume, a tailored suit is her preference. With this she wears her hat, corsage and gloves. If it is an evening wedding, a white gown is always most charming, though not necessary to legal performance of the ceremony. A wreath of flowers is not essential, though a bridal veil is frequently worn with a white evening gown.

Doubts Her Mother.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I am 15 years and my father died three months ago yesterday. I was always abused, but my father always sided with me. Now, since he is gone I am abused more than ever.

I went to the show for two nights now with our neighbor boy and mamma doesn't like him, but she never said anything until last night she said if I ever went out with him she wouldn't let me come in again. I like him, but I don't love him. What harm is there in going with him if he behaves himself and acts decent?

About three or four months ago a boy moved across the street from us and we soon learned to love each other very much. He moved here with a sister and brother and niece. About three days ago he went where he came from, but before he left he wanted to kiss me, but I wouldn't let him. Should I have let him kiss me or was it all right not to let him?

What should I do about the first, as it is getting so I can hardly stand it. Mother won't even get me a pair of shoes. Not only that, but they all talk so horrid to me. Sometimes they almost make me believe I don't belong in this family, but I know better, because I am the very picture of my sister.

LIGHT BLUE EYES.
It is impossible for me to tell whether your idea of abuse is exaggerated or not. The probability is that your mother loves you more dearly than you realize and that you are really a bona fide member of the family. Calm yourself and try to believe that your mother's love is the best for you to follow. When you are 18 or older, you may be safe to trust your own judgment, but a girl of 15 who makes dates with one boy while she boldly says she has been in love with another, is not her own best friend. Try being considerate of your mother, confide in her and see how much she can help you with your problems.

Wedding Cards.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: Would you be kind enough to answer the following few questions in the Omaha Bee: I am to be married soon and, as my parents are divorced, I was in doubt as to how the announcements should read. Would it be proper to say Mr. and Mrs. announce the etc., or would it be better to leave the parents out entirely? Should I have invitations and announcements both or just send a few announcements early to those I wish to invite? Trusting that this will appear in the paper soon, I remain, sincerely,

PEGGY.
If you live with your mother the announcement should bear her name. If with your father, use his name. If with aunt and uncle use their name, viz: Mrs. John Doe announces the engagement of her daughter. The father's name may be used in the same way. If uncle, then use: "Mr. and Mrs. James Gordon Smith announce the engagement of their niece. Invitations if you have a wedding, but for a quiet marriage the announcement is sufficient.

Vest Makes Costume Chic

Silk poplins are used for many of the autumn's suits. They are usually in light shades. This attractive suit has a smart belt coat, deep reverses, fine tucks and buttons of self material. A vest of a contrasting fabric is effectively introduced. Linen can be used for this suit and if of dark colors would be entirely suitable for these fall days.

Remember, when you are out of work that there is one job you can always get, and that is working for yourself, improving yourself. Knowledge is power; mental training of every kind is power, and every bit of useful knowledge is priceless. Intelligence always leads; ignorance always is left behind.

I have known of young men when out of jobs really to earn more in knowledge than their salaries when they had jobs, by increasing their earning power, improving themselves in all sorts of ways; they really got ahead faster when they were out of work and looking for a job than when they were working.

When you are dead-in-earnest you can always find a job. If you can't find one with some one else you can always find a job with yourself, to improve yourself, enlarge your mentality, to store your mind with useful knowledge through good reading, good books and observation. These are all within easy reach.

I know of no job better than the self-improvement job, if you are dead-in-earnest and are bound to win, if you are determined to stand for something in the world.—The New Success.

Evening Gowns Are as Far Away From the Uniform Lines as Possible

By ELEANOR GUNN.
There never was a time when a woman could exercise more individuality in dress than the present. Fashions soon will be going through a transitory period. There is not the slightest trace of the influence of the uniforms in which so many women have lived for practically two years. It was predicted that the comfort of the uniform, with its many pockets and its freedom from feminizing frills would start a vogue for androgyny which would find expression in suits that were mannish and in dresses that were plain.

Quite the reverse has been the case. Every woman who served during the war and wore a uniform in and day out expressed herself as being eager to be back in "civies." They did not gaisny the comfort and the time-saving and the durability of the uniform, but they were glad to take up the burden of being well dressed, and the problem of "what shall I wear," just for the sweet privilege of being feminine again.

It is true that suits had a bigger sale last year than for many years, and this may be because of the practicality, but, then, it was not the plain mannish suit that sold, but the rather elaborately fur-trimmed one. The coat and skirt idea is always near to every woman's heart. No wardrobe is at all complete without a smart suit, or maybe two, but it is a far cry from the ripple suit of today, or rather tomorrow, to the war workers' uniform.

One thing has resulted from it all—an appreciation of clothes and an intense desire to dress up and look one's prettiest. This fact coupled with the many occasions for wearing good clothes, is making things hum in shops where lovely evening and afternoon frocks are created or copied.

Luxurious Evening Gowns.
It is an old story now to predict gorgeous evening apparel, and yet everywhere one turns it is the same account of beautiful fabrics and jewels, shimmering metallic tissues, rare laces and brocades that are worth their weight in gold. What all this is going for is apparently quite incidental. The miser must be made to spend his gold; indeed, will probably do so gladly, since he will receive so much beauty in return.

encrustations of pearl and crystal. It has rather classic lines, the neck being cut straight across the shoulder in Roman toga fashion; the long waist and curious girdle arrangement giving it quite an Oriental air. The treatment of the edge of the full skirt enhances this effect. One encounters so many odd endings to skirts nowadays. This one is gathered and, as the skirt is velvet, rather a heavy effect is produced. The line has an upward tendency in the front which may not appeal to the average woman, although it is considered very chic.

The festoon of pearls and crystals which takes the place of a sleeve is of decorative value as well as providing a slight feeling of protection. Many women require something to break the line of the upper arm. This the festoon arrangement does, and in a manner quite in keeping with the character of the dress.—Fairchild Fashion Service.
