CLEMENCEAU, IN SPEECH, RISES ABOVE POLITICS

Premier Pleads for Tolerance and Social Justice and Appeals to Workingmen to Work.

Strasbourg, Alsace, Nov. 5.—(By Associated Press.)—Premier Clemenceau's speech here yesterday, considered his political valedictory to France, arose much above party politics.

Dealing with social organization, M. Clemenceau declared that no government could possibly prevent its people from governing themselves, but said government must be based on public order and respect of individual rights.

Referring to direct action the premier asserted society should only count upon the voluntary help of those determined to defend their right to enjoy public services.

As for the bolsheviks, said Premier Clemenceau, "there can be no discussion between them and the public. It is a simple question of force. In clamoring for freedom for themselves, they want to impose upon others a terrible and absolute dictatorship."

SHE DARKENED HER GRAY HAIR

Tell How She Did It With a Home-Made Remedy.

Mrs. E. H. Boots, a well-known resident of Buchanan County, Ia., who darkened her gray hair, made the following statement:

"Any lady or gentleman can darken their gray or faded hair, and make it soft and glossy with this simple remedy, which they can mix at home. To half a pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, one small box of Barbo Compound and 3/4 ounce of glycerine. These ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair every other day until the gray hair is darkened sufficiently. It does not color the scalp; is not greasy and does not rub off. It will make a gray-haired person look 10 to 20 years younger."

My Heart and My Husband ADELE GARRISON'S New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

How Madge Shifted One Burden to Dicky's Shoulders.

My mother-in-law stood looking fixedly at me waiting for a reply to her proposal that she and the baby accompany Dicky and me on our proposed ride. At my delay in answering her, he looked changed to an indignant glare.

For I am afraid I presented a picture of open-mouthed dismay at her words. I had carefully concealed from her the fact that Dicky wished me to run the car, a procedure of course, which would effectually bar her and the baby, or, in fact, any one else as passengers, for I knew that I could bear no one watching my first attempts, and was sure that Dicky would not run the risk of having any one else in the car to distract my attention or his.

But if I were to give her this information now she would think I was sharply employing a ruse to keep her from going with us. She was in a martyr mood anyway, and when she is indulging herself in one of those all of her natural common sense seems to depart.

I suppose the state of my nerves was responsible for the words which came to my lips. For as I uttered them I thought hotly that I saw no reason why I should always be the buffer for my mother-in-law's whims and irritation. I would let Dicky deal with them direct, for a change.

"Unfortunately, it is not in my power either to assent or object," I said, modulating my voice to careful conventional courtesy. "You will have to speak to Dicky about it."

I do not think my captious mother-in-law was ever so astonished in her life. I have always been most careful to humor every whim of hers that I possibly could, no matter at what inconvenience to myself, and have only stood firm in contradiction to her when some vital issue was involved. This cool dodging of her request was something entirely new in her experience.

"Where is Richard?" "I felt a trifle ashamed of myself when I saw her jaw drop and her eyes open wide in rather pathetic bewilderment. But the next moment she had recovered herself and

I saw that she needed no sympathy from me or anybody else, but was abundantly able to take care of herself.

"Speak to Dicky, forsooth!" she stormed. "I might be that ape in the kitchen by the tone you are adopting. When I find it necessary to get down on my knees to my son to ask him to take me for a motor ride it will be high time for me to depart for the Old Ladies' Home! I suppose that is where you and he would both be glad to see me but you will not have the satisfaction. I am entitled to a home and consideration in my son's house and I am going to have it. Where is Richard?"

"In the garage," I returned shortly, for she was so tremendously angry that I saw words either placating or otherwise would only irritate her more. And I was glad to escape into my room as she swept down the stairs, every line of her retreating back expressing haughty wrath.

What Dicky Reported. I sank into a rocking chair, trembling a bit, for I was not as strong as I had thought. I wondered if it were worth while dressing for the proposed motor lesson, if I knew my mother-in-law and I thought I did, she could be counted on to make things so thoroughly unpleasant for Dicky that all his pleasure in the proposed outing would be spoiled.

In that case I was afraid my temperamental husband would throw the whole trip up.

I resolved, however, to add no further complications to Dicky's plan, therefore I dressed quickly in a serviceable yet cool little gown of blue linen with brown oxford and hose. Then, putting a light brown sweater where I could reach it easily and take it with me for fear of a change in temperature, I took up a magazine and settled myself to read in the endeavor to keep from getting nervous.

Dicky's hurried and unceremonious entrance a little while later made me drop the magazine startled. His face was flushed, and his eyes dancing with amusement.

"Gee!" he said, pushing back the damp, tumbled hair, and throwing himself down upon the couch.

"whatever did you say to the mater to put her into such an awful wax. She came down to the garage, and if I had not called for the fire department her words would have set the place on fire. As it is the walls are blistered. As near as I could make out the ravings she said you and I had turned her out of the house and home, but she didn't intend to stand for it, and wound up with an imperative but rather incoherent and tearful demand to be taken out with Junior for an automobile ride immediately. "What did you say to her anyway?"

I felt my nerves going and was tempted to make a sharp reply. But as I hesitated there came my mother-in-law's sharp, peremptory knock upon the door.

Man Accused by Girl Given A 90-Day Jail Sentence

A 90-day jail sentence was given John Karin, 4617 Farnam street, in central police court yesterday for "disorderly conduct." The Blackmore girl appeared against Karin yesterday. She testified that she held Karin at bay at the point of a revolver when he attempted to assault her.
