Modern Art and Old Masters In Exhibit at The Hotel Fontenelle

By LETA MOORE MEYER.

A first view of the exhibition at the Hotel Fontenelle, of pictures from the Vose galleries of Boston, brought by the Society of Fine Arts, is like the swinging of a pendulum. There is "The Lone Cypress" of Monterey, Cal., by Elliott Daingerfield, brilliant in color, for the artist is probably our most brilliant colorist, all reality; and then the imaginary "Rosaling and Cecilia" of Albert P. Ryder, who is always an intimate friend and who thought of composition, feeling and passion and of color only as a harmonious accompaniment. There is "Late Afternoon," an ultra-characteristic Fritz Thaulow with the swirling water he always does, plus lovely feeling and harmony which he has not always attained, seeming to express turbulence of nature and of soul beneath a calm exterior. Then there are "Le Soleil Couchant," and "Etang," by Jules Dupre, all calm and serene and honey.

We find Sir Douglas Wilkie's portrait of King William IV, reeking with the atmosphere of courts and pageants, intrigue and passing pleasure and magnificence, and then "Sun and Shadow," by F. W. Benson, showing quiet home life, a picture of the artist's two daughters, and again "Boy With Pigs," by George Morland, with its simple barnyard life. A most interesting contrast are W. D. Hamilton's portraits of little R. C. Vose, jr., late in subject, fashion and treatment, and the little fellow's ancestors, "Daniel Rea," by Joseph Badger, and "Mrs. Daniel Rea and Daughter," by J. Singleton Copley, both painted more than 100 years ago.

As the pendulum swings back to center we realize by what widely divergent methods real art can be attained. Many of the gems of the collection have not been mentioned as further study of them is necessary for their discussion.

Divorce Courts

Evelena P. Riles filed in district court a cross-petition to the divorce petition of her husband, Roger E. Riles. She charges that he associates with other women and compels her to economize so that he can get money to spend on the other women.

Zella Ditz was awarded a divorce from Bradley Ditz on the ground of nonsupport and restored to her maiden name, Hickerson, by Judge Wakeley in divorce court.

William Fifield, on allegations of extreme cruelty, was granted a divorce from Marie Fifield by Judge Wakeley in divorce court.

Millie Donnell, charging her husband, Charles, with extreme cruelty, was granted a divorce by Judge Estelle in divorce court and restored to her maiden name, Branson.

Negro Told Judge He Didn't Want Coal to Go to Waste

Sam Casey, negro, 2602 North Fourteenth street, who was arrested yesterday at Fourteenth and Locust streets, charged with stealing coal from the Missouri Pacific railroad yards, was fined $2.50 and costs in Central police court yesterday, after the judge warned him to keep off the tracks. Casey told the judge he had to cross the tracks to take his washing to his washwoman, and picked up the coal from under the cars "to keep it from going to waste."

Boys Under 18 Can No Longer Enlist in Navy, Is Ruling

Omaha Public Library Head Admitted to Citizenship

Miss Edith Tobitt, who has been head of the Omaha public library for a number of years, was admitted to American citizenship yesterday by District Judge Wakley, presiding over the naturalization court in the court house.

Miss Tobitt's witnesses were Miss Jessie Royse, 826 North Forty-second street and W. J. Connell, attorney, Blackstone hotel.

Miss Tobitt stated that the enfranchisement of women and patriotic reasons in connection with the war prompted her to become a citizen of the United States.

Answers All the Questions.

Miss Tobitt, answering the printed questions, declared that she has no conscientious scruples against taking up arms in defense of this country and its institutions. The questions as to what class she was in the selective draft and whether she claimed exemption from military service were, of course, left unanswered.

Miss Agnes Josephine Grant, 803 South Thirtieth street, who is principal of the Belvidere school, is another prominent Omaha woman who was admitted to American citizenship yesterday.

Her witnesses were Isabelle Kennedy, 542 South Twenty-ninth street, and Elizabeth S. Rubendell, 2807 Shirley street.

"I was born in Canada and my parents came to Chicago when I was a small child," she said. "I think my father took out naturalization papers, but all his records were destroyed in a fire in Chicago. I want to be sure that I am an American citizen."

Miss Marren P. Eriksen, 3421 North Twenty-eighth street, a trained nurse, was admitted to citizenship also.
