Hard Time Party.
Mrs. A. M.: A hard time party depends for its success upon the costumes. Each guest must come dressed in clothes which suggest poverty. There should be a fine for a costume in any way suggestive of money. If the fine be money, it could be given to the Red Cross. Or the fine may be merely a hard task set for the culprit to perform. The hostess must follow her own lead. She cannot ask her guests to come dressed in old clothes, such as patched aprons for the girls and overalls for the boys, and then give them an elaborate luncheon. Cornmeal mush and milk, or corn bread and coffee, doughnuts and coffee, hot biscuits with syrup and coffee, or the elaborate repast of baked beans with brown bread and coffee, are all suitable refreshments. Popcorn, apples or a tatty pull are other appropriate selections. The entertainment should involve no expenditure of money. Old-fashioned games are best suited to a party of this kind. Invitations should be sent out on common brown wrapping paper. They may be neat and well worded, although some prefer to use poor English and misspell the words. They ought to be delivered in person if possible to avoid expense of postage stamps.

Dear Miss Fairfax: We read your love column every day and are writing to you for advice and not advice for my love affairs. On the flap of the envelope of many letters we have received, were signed the initials S. A. G. and B. S. B. Not knowing what words these initials stand for, we would like to have you publish the answers to them, if you know, in The Bee. Hoping to see an answer in The Bee's love column in a couple of days, we are, TWO LOVERS
There should be no secrets between lovers. Ask the writer what the initials mean. I used to know the meaning of "S. W. A. K.," but the letters you cite are too modern for one of my conservative habits.

Three Boys.
Dear Miss Fairfax: Omaha Bee. We have read your advice to others, so thought we would come to you with our troubles. We are 15, 16, 18, and are very much in love with girls of 15, 15, 18.
We saw these girls on the way back from one of the foot ball games which we played at a small town near here. We would like to know how we should go about to meet them, as we are very anxious. We hope to see this answered in the paper soon. Thanking you, we are,
PINKY, MAC AND PUNK.
How can you love girls whom you have never met? If you are attracted to them have some mutual friend introduce you. However, by next week, perhaps, you will have changed your mind.

My HEART and My HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of 'Revelations of a Wife'

How Madge, Dicky and Grantland "Found" Themselves.
I shall never be quite clear as to the happenings of the seconds following my unfortunate turning of my car almost across the path of the one driven by Major Grantland. I heard a shout and the next I knew there was a crash and I was thrown violently against Dicky.

I felt his arms around me, realizing that he had tried to shield me from whatever was coming, realized also that while I was shaken I was not hurt, and straightened myself in his arms.
"I am perfectly all right, Dicky," I said reassuringly, for I knew from the torrent of inquiries that he was pouring out that he was uninjured, and was only anxious about me.
"Are you sure?" Major Grantland's voice demanded from the other car, which looked as if it were welded into ours.

Dicky looked at him startled. It was the first time he had recognized him, apparently.

"Why, hello, Grantland!" he said heartily. "Can this really be you. Of all the queer meetings! I say, old chap, I hope we didn't spoil your car."

"Never mind the car," the other man returned a bit shortly, the while his eyes fairly burned my face with their searching intensity. "Are you sure, Mrs. Graham is not injured in any way?"

"Positively sure," Dicky returned, "thanks to you. If it hadn't been for the way you slewed that machine around I'd hate to think of where we all three might have been. You see Mrs. Graham is having her first lesson in motor driving today, and naturally lost her head. I am entirely to blame. I should have grabbed the wheel the moment I saw you."

I do not think that Dicky intended or was even conscious of the patronizing note in his voice as he explained matters. But that Major Grantland recognized it I knew from the unmistakable resentful flash in his eyes. As for me, I found I was watching those eyes with an intensity of which I was ashamed. But the mental transition had been too great for my poise.

Grantland Commands.
The last time I had seen him in Lillian's library he had been helplessly groping his way about, a blinded man. And here he was evidently in full possession of his sight, at least I could see no difference in his wonderfully brilliant eyes with the hint of steel in them which I remembered from my first memorable encounter with him. He must have had a miraculous recovery.

"I am afraid I was responsible for startling Mrs. Graham," Major Grantland replied. "The last time she saw me I was blind, to all appearances hopelessly so. My appearance with restored sight, driving a car, would be enough to startle more experienced drivers than she."
It was a patent attempt to excuse my shortcomings, one of which I did not particularly thank him, especially when I felt rather than saw Dicky stiffen slightly beside me and heard him say with punctilious courtesy:

"You are very kind, I am sure. But don't you think we'd better look these cars over?"

"Yes—after Mrs. Graham gets out," Major Grantland promptly responded. "They are locked here in such a way one of them may turn over when we try to separate them. If you will take Mrs. Graham away I will see whether my boat will reverse or not."

Dicky threw back his head angrily. "What do you mean, Grantland?" he demanded. "Dye think I'm apt to let you pull off a stunt like that alone? Get out, dear," he turned to me, "and then Major Grantland and I will see what we can do with these machines."

"I beg of you, Graham," I heard Major Grantland say in a low voice, "not to distress your wife by remaining in the car. She has had shock enough. Besides, it is your car that is tipped. Mine is in no danger. I have been in similar smashups across. If you will just permit me to try reversing my car."

By the Roadside.
"All right," Dicky said a bit sulkily, following me out of the car, and in another minute or two Major Grantland had skillfully drawn his own car away from ours, which was tipped as he had said, but which righted itself smoothly enough when the officer's machine was removed from it.

Then for what seemed a very long time I sat on a bank by the wayside while the two men took stock of the damage done, and repaired minor injuries. At last I saw Dicky shake his head ruefully.

"It's the garage for my boat," he said dolefully. "I wonder where the nearest one is."

"Just a mile back in the next village," Major Grantland responded promptly. "I'll run down at once and send a man back to the garage and send a message to the garage off. But it's a shame to put you to all of this trouble."

"Let me worry about that, my dear chap," the other returned heartily. Then as his glance traveled toward me his voice and manner changed. "Look to Mrs. Graham," he called, starting toward me. "I am afraid she is ill."

Kiddies love bread baked with Omar flour

And don't you just think for one moment that kiddies don't know good bread. And when more kiddies in more homes are fed more Omar bread—there will be less cry for between meal bites of less nourishing, in some cases, harmful foods or confections.

Omar Flour bread, properly baked—almost is a confection. To say that every slice starts with a grin—is putting it mildly. And to bring sunny smiles to the faces of the little tots—who wouldn't make the one little effort of just looking for the name and picture of Omar on every sack?

Certainly—grocers whose customers' interests come first sell Omar—with this guarantee in each sack:

"If Omar doesn't bake the best bread you ever baked, simply take the empty sack to your grocer and bet your money"
