Heart Beats

CLUBBING

An interesting note comes from Oscar Wilder Craik, director, with news of the Little Theater, or, more properly, the Omaha Folk theater. The note follows:

"During the last three years, there were many wonderful things accomplished through the efforts of all people working together for a common cause. It is largely to preserve this feeling of fellowship that our theater movement is now launched. We are working to establish in Omaha a Folk theater, a theater owned by the people, managed by the people, and supported by the people. It is not at all our idea to form around the theater an exclusive circle of aesthetes, whose only object in being associated with the project, is that they may be in fashion. If the entire people of Omaha, from the most cultured artists, to the persons most lacking in academic training, do not feel that the theater belongs to them, personally and completely, and is for them to use and enjoy, our efforts will be a failure. There is only one qualification which people must have to take active part in the theater. They must be sincerely interested, and willing while they are at it to put their whole soul into the work. The most fundamental instinct of human beings is to express themselves, and the most complete means of expression is the drama. It is the people who wish to express themselves, who shall form the working force of our theater. It is the people who wish to learn or re-learn points of life, who shall form our audiences. It is the people well blessed with worldly goods, with big hearts and big minds, who shall form our support. The Folk theater will be a human institution, founded on the divine spirit of humanity, which has grown so wonderfully during the last few years.

We will hitch our wagon to a star, but we will keep the hind wheels on the ground—and we will work together.

Very sincerely yours,
OSCAR WILDER CRAIK.

There are shifty eyes
In the heads
Of men—
And the heads
Of women too—
That twist
And turn
From right to wrong—
When talking
To me and you.
They shift
To the floor—
To the sky—
Or the ground—
Or across the street—
They wander around
Without guide
Or ruler.
Everywhere except
To meet your eye.
But the little child
Has a fearless gaze—
An honest appeal
Or a fair attack—
For his conscience
Is clear.
And he has no fear
That discovery
Will thwart his plans.
As time goes on
And his heart is warped—
And his schemes
Are twisted and wily—
His eyes betray
A soul turned gray
From dishonest mould—
Treachorous decay.
Two eyes grow shifty
And his evil ways
Are boldly placarded
To the world—
No sign is brighter
In electric lights—
Than the lights
Of the eyes
Which disclose the soul.
The man who refuses
To meet your gaze
In a fearless
Frank
And calmly way—
Is a coward—
A sneak—
And a treacherous one—
Whose intent is evil—
Whose thoughts
Are thieves—
Trust not
The shifty eye.

"There are women, there," she said, "who are born and live their lives on boats. They know the land only when they are buried." According to Mrs. Stuntz, these women are buxom, healthy and pink-cheeked.

Mrs. Stuntz told also of the origin of bound feet for the women of China. The daughter of an emperor of the past was born club-footed. This gave rise to an edict order that the feet of all children be bound. The fashion thus sprang into being.
