My HEART and My HUSBAND Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

What Lillian Underwood Declared to Madge. "I think Richard Second is getting tired, Marion." It was hard to recognize Mother Graham's voice, usually noticeable for its austerity, in the softened accents she employed toward Lillian's charming little daughter.' But Marion long ago stormed the last citadel of my mother-in-law's heart by her absolute devotion to the baby, and is now so firmly entrenched that the elderly woman indulges her almost as atrociously as she does her small

"Do you want him to take his nap?" the little girl responded instantly. "It is time for it," the grandmother said smiling.

"And mayn't I come, too, while you go that funny humble-bee way?" Mother Graham's face flushed with pleasure. She is very proud of her ability to put Junior to sleep with a sound suggestive of the buzzing of bees. I know, of course, that it is contrary to the last word in baby psychology to allow him to be put to sleep in any such manner, but Mother Graham takes such manifest comfort in the performance, and, be-
