Community Kitchens.
There has been of late years a great change in the living conditions or habits or customs, whichever you may say, of the business and professional woman. She is rebelling at the boarding house, haunted by her predecessor, and is more often found establishing singly or with a friend or two of her own choosing, a home to return to after the day's work. And, instead of going out to meals, she prefers to have some, at least, in that home. Breakfast, of course, is for the average woman an easily prepared meal. With all the labor-saving devices of the day, she can start preparations when she arises and find the morning meal practically ready for her when she is ready for it. Luncheon is usually a more or less casual meal, taken, as a rule, where and when most convenient; but, when it comes to dinner at night, she does enjoy having that in her own home, at her own fire-side, whether figuratively or in reality, and she enjoys having an occasional friend come there to enjoy it with her. Yet, after a busy day, she has usually neither time nor inclination to prepare the sort of meal she wants. For her the community kitchen is, indeed, a blessing.

Heart Beats

By A. K.

Christmas
Is not for old folks—
Experienced—
Sobered—
And dull—
Merry bells
And music swell
The Yuletide atmosphere.
A green tree
Stands in the corner
With candles
And tinsel bright—
Goodies and toys
For girls and boys
Hang from its branches—
Rest on the floor.
It waits
For early risers
Who soft-toe
Down the stairs—
Some of the children
Are seventy years—
Some are only two
And the house
Is a merry mansion
Whether castle
Or merely a hut—
For the Christmas spirit
Abounds without
And penetrates within.
The cloak of Dignity
Falls away.
From stately figures
And heads of gray—
And the child within
Comes out to play
With other kiddies
On Christmas.
To make the feast day
Quite complete.
We'll divide our gifts
And holiday sweets
With sad little folks—
Who were quite forgotten—
By good-intentioned
Old Santa Claus—
Christmas is not
A finished day
Until you have given
Some things away.
