FLASHES from FILMLAND

ONE more noted character of fiction has been transferred to the screen, Maurice LeBlanc's master crook creation, Arsene Lupin, who appears as a hero in the Paramount-Artcraft picture, "Tenth of the Tiger," which has its last showing at the Rialto today. Into an air of mystery a pleasing love story has been written, making the picture very interesting.

Sun—Geraldine Farrar again demonstrates her subversive to art in a terrific hand-to-hand fight with another woman in her Goldwyn production, "The World and Its Woman," which is to be presented for the last time today at the Sun theater. The fight is one which cannot be "faked" and it surpasses in intensity the terrific struggle in which Geraldine Farrar engaged in the filming of "Carmen."

Empress—"Tin Pan Alley," that delightful comedy of music and young love, closes its run tonight at the Empress theater. For New Year's day Manager Le Marquand announces "The Band Box," starring Doris Keayon from Louis Joseph Vase's gripping story. Several of New York's most prominent reviewers consider this the greatest screen achievement of the beautiful star.
