Friendship!
The essence—
The seasoning of things!
And yet
There is a line
So fine
That most of us
Can hardly see
The dim divide
Between our friends
And mere acquaintances
Perhaps one smiles
And pleases me—
Another storms
In such a way
That all the laughing nymphs
In me
Rise up in glee.
And one has such
A childish way
Of listening
To what I say
My vanity is flattered.
And Mercury's son
Who comes sometimes—
Brings gossip
On his winged feet—
And tickles me.
And still
The lot of them
Are like bad wine—
State overseasoned food—
Which leaves a sodden memory
Of time spent worthlessly.
One's friends should be
Of just two kinds—
"Who learn from us."
And those that teach.
True friendship
Is a game of Give and Take—
Too many
Are but straying leaves
Blown about
In errant winds
Of circumstance—
With no particular joy
To bring—
And leave no deep impression.
Companionship—
And friendship—
May vastly differ—
Friends should mean
To each of us
Mental—Spiritual
And moral strength—
Friendship
Is a sacred word—
And few of us know how
To understand.
It makes
The whole world finer,
One's heart
A great deal truer—
For Perfect Friendship
Is more rare
Than perfect Love. SELAH.

A Great Nation Cannot Exist Without Art.

The roots of the old vine of art strike deep and spread far. Sculpture and painting may be the blossom and the fruit; architecture is the stem from which these depend; but the sustenance of the old vine is drawn from the sweet earth itself through a myriad of tiny fibrils, the esthetics of every day, through which the plain people retain their habit of loving the beautiful and of requiring it.

Broadly speaking, our national sin with regard to the finer things of life has been a sin of isolation. We have been prone to relegate our art—and even our culture and our religion—to particular classes of people or places or days. We have regarded "the finer things" as ingredients, instead of seeing them as outlooks on life or distillers of it. As our development has progressed we have, it is true, come more and more to regard these ingredients as desirable, but we still failed to grasp them as forces, as instruments of more complete living, as our European friends (even the peasants) have long since done. This is probably because we have grown without the constant reminder which ancient monuments afford of the essential humanity of our race and because we have had our esthetic feast in the great uncultivated natural environment which has been ours to subdue. The latter is a condition on which the esthetic and artistic tends to vegetate and go to seed.

But art is on the whole a moral proposition, and as such it knows no bound of time or place or person. Art is an attitude toward production. Production is a peculiarly clear-cut form of conduct itself. Production without a recognition of the possible ideal, without a regard for that universal longing which outreaches the irreducible minimum of necessity is not a wholly sincere nor a wholly conscientious, form of conduct. "A great industrial nation without an industrial art" can, after all, be great in bulk only. When practically every industrial and commercial nation in the world excepting ours has long seen the light on this subject, it would be a perilous thing to venture forth with our wares upon the seven seas without a new reckoning.

But the new reckoning is being taken. Business is taking an initiative in the matter and turning to the art museums and the art schools for co-operation. The thing is felt in the home; the best attended lectures in the art museum are those in which a discussion of the furnishing of the home is offered. In other words, the new art awakening which, must ultimately lead to greater culture and finer painting, if such are our need, is beginning at the roots—in the everyday arts that touch all the people. For art is democratic in its growth. As public opinion, in the last analysis, determines the course of a democracy, so the recognition of the universal desire for upward with cumulative force—like that of the wave of green that we call a vine—and having this force, the force of life itself, it cannot but burst forth when its time comes, in undreamed of fragrance and beauty over the land.—George Eggers, Director, Art Institute of Chicago.

Questions of Behavior.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: We are two girls of 17 and 18, respectively. We are not ravine beauties, but are counted "fairly good looking." Is there any harm for young girls of our age to go to dances? When a girl dances with a boy, and she wishes him to meet her friend, should she introduce him between introductions, wait until the waltz or fox trot is over? Should she ask him first if he wants to be introduced to this girl friend? Should girls of our age go to a steady company with certain boys, or should we be friendly with them all?

Now, about the girl who cannot keep a boy. We have had experience with the boys, but we are not crazy over them. Always speak to them whenever you meet them, never run after them, but let them run after you, and never let them know you are crazy over them, for if a boy knows you're crazy over him he will seek other company, and do not let the boys boss you. Hoping to see our answers in the next Bee and thanks for your trouble.

FRECKLES AND PIMPLES.
If you go to respectable dances and return home at a reasonable hour I see no harm in dancing. You may introduce your friends at any convenient time, but you should ask your girl friend if she wishes to meet your boy friend—be being taken for granted that he wishes to be introduced. If your intentions are serious there is no objection to "steady company," but you are very young, and it is much wiser to be friendly with them all. Your idea of handling the "boy" situation is all right. Stick to it.

Wants Help.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: You have helped so many people I have been wondering if you could help me.

I am a professional woman, and have a home to keep also, and must have some help at once.

I want a lady that is alone in the world and wants a home; must be neat and clean, about 45 years of age and willing to do housework; does not have to be so well and strong, as the work is not so heavy.

A PROFESSIONAL WOMAN.
No doubt there is such a woman in Omaha. I hope so.

Wants a Child.
I am 40 years old and our home is childless. We would be glad to have a child, boy or girl, up to 10 years of age. If anyone is looking for such a home for a child my address is with Miss Fairfax.

L. G. W.
You are very kind to offer a child your home. I trust that some unfortunate little one will be located.
