

Transition of Jicarilla Indian Reservation
 Albuquerque, N. M., Jan. 2.—From a barren waste of arroyos and wind-swept mountains to fertile plain and grazing hillsides in the transition of the Jicarilla Indian reservation, near Dulca, N. M., in the period of a few short years, since 1916.

commissioner, recently completed a tour of inspection of this famous reservation that was doomed to decay, with the redmen rapidly dwindling from the white plague. In 1916 statistics indicated that the death rate far exceeded the birth rate, and some "experts" even named the date when the Jicarillas would be extinct.

reservation today is a stretch of rich farmland, with hundreds of herds of cattle and sheep grazing on the hill-sides; the redskins are happy and prosperous, and enjoying enlightenment from numerous vocational schools established in the district.

Victim of Hazing Party at Cornell College Near Death
 St. Johnsbury, Vt., Jan. 2.—That Justin Curtis, victim of student hazing at Cornell, is alive is regarded almost as a miracle. He is at his home here, now able to walk about the house and to use his left hand. Curtis suffered a fractured skull, a crushed right arm, two broken wrists, a broken hip, and every part of his body was battered and bruised. The sophomores at Cornell were hazing the freshmen. Curtis, a sophomore had no part in the hazing. However, as he was returning to his room about midnight he was seized by three freshmen. There was a lively tussle. The struggle continued across the room. Curtis caused the three students to loosen their hold. As he did so he fell back on to the open window sill. Losing his balance, Curtis plunged head foremost to the ground, four stories below. The young man landed on a solid pavement after the drop of 68 feet.
