CLUB DOM

Sidelights On National Club Women Now In Session In Omaha.

"We will never be able to take cognizance of the part women's clubs have taken in training women for broader citizenship and effective leadership," said Mrs. Josiah Evans Cowles of Los Angeles at the Fontenelle hotel Monday morning. Mrs. Cowles is serving her fourth year as president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. She is in Omaha to preside at sessions of the general federation board, which meets here from January 6-8.

"We can cite women's service in war activities as some indication of the value of clubs as training schools," continued Mrs. Cowles. "All over the country club women were found in executive places of general federation board, which meets here from January 6-8.

"We can cite women's service in war activities as some indication of the value of clubs as training schools," continued Mrs. Cowles. "All over the country club women were found in executive places of general federation board, which meets here from January 6-8.

"Clubs have been co-operating healthily with municipalities throughout the United States. They have been of untold value in discouraged communities. In a mining district where business is at low ebb, for example, it is usually the club women who get together and say that their children shall have educational advantages, libraries and civic opportunities. They were engaged in 'community service' long before that term was used. The story of the library development in this country is woven in and out through club history.

When seen at Hotel Fontenelle Monday morning, Mrs. Cowles was wearing a tailored costume of black. A brooch and jet beads were her only ornaments. Club women accord Mrs. Cowles great credit as a masterly executive. "She thinks rapidly and speaks quickly," says Mrs. M. D. Cameron of Omaha, "and always says the right thing at the right time."

Mrs. Cowles spoke before the Omaha Woman's club Monday afternoon. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday are crowded full of business sessions, except for a dinner Wednesday evening which will be a social affair with many Nebraska women in attendance in honor of the federation visitors.

"Men are astonished to see how much we get out of how little," said Mrs. E. G. Denniston, director from California, who is attending general federation board meetings in Omaha. "Our dues are very small. Our women work with us in an immeasurable amount of voluntary service is given the country over by club women to their communities and mankind."

Mrs. Eugene B. Lawson, a past president of the Oklahoma Women's club, and present director from that state to the general federation, as well as a member of the reorganization committee, says there are 225 clubs in her state with a membership of 7,000. "How is Oklahoma doing?" she was asked. "Coming up and going up," was her quick reply.

Mrs. Mary I. Wood of New Hampshire, corresponding secretary for the general federation, voiced approval of the Nebraska Federation Bulletin. "You have made it a trade journal, and that is a real federation need," she declared.

"Don't try to do what New York or some other place does," admonished Mrs. John Shuttleworth of St. Joseph, La. "Look after local needs of the present and near future. That is 'ouah' motto," said this delightful southern woman. "All the parent-teachers' associations in Louisiana are federated," she continued. Louisiana women are deeply interested in community welfare."

Mrs. John D. Wilkinson of Louisiana, director-elect from that state, is attending the board sessions as a member of the reorganization committee. The committee, under leadership of Mrs. Robert Burdette of California, held a meeting Sunday, at which preliminaries were discussed.

The woman intelligent
Lectured one day
To a class of girls
Who studied Life—
She dwelt at length
On the curly locks—
The French heeled slipper
And Georgette blouse.
These things—
Were out of place
On women who hoped
To win in this race—
With men.
Tailored suits
With mannish lines—
Clean white collars
And spotless cuffs—
Low heeled shoes
Laced or buttoned high—
Hair cut short
Or drawn back tight—
She recognized them
As appropriate attire—
For girls whose aims
Were somewhat higher
Than winning a prize
In a beauty show.
They all agreed
That the race must strive
For superior strength
And superior mind—
That so long as women
Played to men—
They would be
In a class
With the proverbial worm—
That the one way out
Of this double standard
Was to be independent
And self-supporting—
To accomplish this
They must dress the part
Of the business "mind"
(Which we suppose is man's).
One sweet little thing
Whom we all must love—
Just smiled as they preached
On wisdom.
But she was wiser
Perhaps
Than the bachelor maids thought
"I shall be my best
To be witty."
Said she—
Who studied Life
In her own clever way.
"I'll try to be smart
But I must be pretty—
For the world
Has more eyes
Than intellects."

Famous Women

Jennie Geddes. Jennie Geddes lived in history for one "far-flung" deed. She flung her stool at a bishop's head. In the Antiquarium museum, Edinburgh, Scotland, there is preserved a quaint stool that resembles our camp stool, but broad enough to accommodate Goliath's wife. In 1637 James II of England was endeavoring to force Episcopacy on the Scotch convents, and he had contrived to introduce bishops into the Kirk. On July 23, 1637, the prayer book was to be read in St. Giles' cathedral, Edinburgh. A great crowd had gathered to worship. Jennie Geddes sat on her stool at the rear of the old cathedral. The service began from the new prayer book, when, suddenly through the air "clasp-stool" was hurled at the bishop's head. It came from the first of Jennie Geddes. An uproar! The air was darkened by more and more bibles being hurled. The bishop was mobbed. The town arose. The whole people of Scotland stood up. Civil war raged. And the destruction of the royal government came from the hold, brave stool of old Jennie Geddes.

Griselda. Was Griselda the epitome of patience? Or the climax of absurd forbearance? Let the modern woman judge and answer. A peasant girl of singular beauty of the Tyrol, living in the middle ages, she attracted the attention of a marquis of Salza as she spun, past her cottage door and saw her in the sunlight. He married her, brought her to his castle with pomp; demanded, when her first babe was born that she resign it to him; again demanded that she leave him, Griselda complying meekly; demanded in two years time that she return to array his new bride for the altar—which she did; and, as the dear woman stood trembling before him, the marquis cried: "Thou only art my bride! Thee only do I love!" Griselda had proved to him her immeasurable affection.

Lovelorn

BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Kisses and Beauz.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: We are two girls, 16 and 17. We have been going with two boys for about a year. We like them very well and they are very nice boys. We would like to have you answer a few questions for us.
Is it proper for us to go to the picture show or a dance with these boys?
It all right to go walking on Sunday with them?
We have a friend in Colorado who was in town about two months ago and told us to write to him and he said he would get our address, but was called away and did not get to stay as long as he wanted to. Would it be all right for us to write to him first? Should you kiss a boy good-night? What could you tell him so as not to hurt his feelings?
Thanking you in advance for your

Books and Authors

"Omar and the Rabbi," by Frederick Le Roy Sargent, is a play that is an interesting and most successful experiment. In it the author has arranged Browning's "Rabbi Ben Ezra" and Fitzgerald's translation of "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam" without any alteration or transposition of parts. The fitting together of the two poems reveals an amount of structure and dramatic power hitherto unsuspected, and the result is a drama of great strength and beauty.

"People are like oranges; the rind smells delicious, you like them first for the rind. Then just inside the rind you find that fluffy white stuff, but inside of all is the substance of them, in which lies their unity with God. There is this, too; when you get down to the fruit, you find that it has the same savour as the rind. I take it that the attractions of people, the thing you love them for, is the first thing you perceive about them, the aromatic rind. It's a hint of what is within, if you get through their fluffy part. You find first of all the emanation of their real selves, next their funny odd ways, and finally themselves. Deep in the heart of every one you find what seemed at first their most superficial qualities." This is one of the interesting things that E. F. Benson puts into the mouth of his chief character in his new novel, "Up and Down." What do you think about it?

Everybody gets a thrill when the man who is down and out comes back—everybody gets a sensation when an impractical genius wins a sudden, dramatic and most practical success. We may knock him, for it isn't always easy to witness the other fellow's triumph, but we take interested notice of him just the same. It is such a man that Samuel Merwin brings to life in the crowded pages of his stirring novel—"The Passionate Pilgrim."

"It was when my spirit had become worn through my body like clothes through the sieve of an old coat that I heard the remarkable recipe for insomnia," writes Robert Cortes Holliday in "Peeps at People." "Think of the top of your head." That is what I was told to do. "Think of the top of your head," I said to myself with some disdain in the grip of the mind, "now how in thunder do you think of the top of your head?"

"Do you think of your hair?" I asked, turning my eyeballs upward in their sockets. "Do you think of that lightly hidden baldness?" striving to put my mind, so to say, on the top of my head. "How the dickens—can you—think of—" but a drowsy numbness pained my sense as though of hemlock I had drunk, or emptied some dull opiate to the drains one minute past, and Lethwads had sunk. And I dreamed quite plainly, as though it were some other fellow's, I saw the top of my head."

ANXIOUS BLUE EYES.

If you conduct yourselves like ladies there is no reason why you should not walk with your friends, boys or girls, on Sunday, or dance with them, although you are very young to be attending dances unless they are private affairs. Pay no attention to the Colorado man, and do not kiss your boy friends good-night. I cannot put words into your mouth which will not hurt the boys' feelings, because, after all, it is your attitude toward them and not the spoken words which place you in their mental catalog of girls.

A Dream Girl.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I suppose you hardly remember the queer or unusual person who wrote of her trials with love about two months ago. That personage is me. I first have a confession to make. You remember, I called myself Miss Hope and I was deadly in love. You also remember I wished to become a writer and you told me that I was not worthy. I must confess the love affair was a story. (I won't say lie, it isn't nice), just made up for the thrill of imagining it, but I was serious about the writing. I want to write, just awfully bad. You told me that you would like to know more about me, in order to tell how I might become an author.

Can you answer this question? If so, I'll remember you heartily in my will and will (when I win my fame), remember you to the excited public as my beacon light to fame. Do stories have to be typewritten? What is usually the mistakes of a writer just starting out? Is writing ever a very paying job? Perhaps I am asking you too much, but I feel quite confident that you will be able to help me so that I can start.

What sort of stories do the public like best?
Thanking you in advance I remain your reader, the same old

MISS HOPEFUL.
(Miss Hopeful, celebrated author of short stories—in my dreams.)
How I wish I might answer your questions! If I knew how to become famous do you suppose I could keep from dazzling the public with my brilliant work. If I could answer you truthfully I should not need to be remembered in your will or publicly recognized as your benefactor—the glory and fame would be mine.

Loss of Flesh.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I want ask you for a little advice, but not about love. I have been sick quite a few times this fall and have lost quite a bit of flesh in my arms. I would like to know if there is any way of gaining it back again.
Thanking you in advance, I remain,
KATHRYN.
Milk often helps to build flesh, but if you use very cold water facial baths, or better, ice baths, they will reduce pores and tighten your skin.

Millinery and Beauty.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: Will you kindly tell me, or send me names of millinery wholesalers, houses, as I am intending to open a millinery store here? In order to do so must one secure a license from the city?
Do you know of any reliable feature specialist in Omaha? I would like some work done by my nose. How is Kathryn M. Riley, parlors, 1708 California street—is she still there?
Please answer in Thursday's Bee if possible. Thanking you, I am, sincerely,
K. T. M.
M. Spiesberger & Sons Co. and Thiele Scharf company, both of Omaha, are good wholesalers. Consult your city clerk for information regarding licenses. Mrs. Riley is still at the California street address. There are several good beauty specialists in Omaha. When you are in town call me over the telephone and I will give you the addresses.

E. D. and Another—All you need is some common sense. If I could send it to you I would. Advice wouldn't help.

The Quick Way to Stop a Cough

This home-made syrup does the work in a hurry. Easily prepared, and saves about 5c.

You might be surprised to know that the best thing you can use for a severe cough, is a remedy which is easily prepared at home in just a few moments. It's cheap, but for prompt results it beats anything else you ever tried. Usually stops the ordinary cough or chest cold in 24 hours. Tastes pleasant, too—children like it—and it is a pure and good.

Four 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex in a pint bottle; then fill it up with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. Thus you make a full pint—a family supply—but costing no more than a small bottle of ready-made cough syrup.

And as a cough medicine, there is really nothing better to be had at any price. It goes right to the spot and gives quick, lasting relief. It promptly heals the inflamed membrane that lines the throat and air passages, stops the annoying throat tickle, loosens the phlegm, and soon your cough stops entirely. Soothing for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, famous for its healing effect on the membranes.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., St. Wayne, Ind.
