

PERSHING LAUDS PATRIOTISM OF OMAHA AT C. OF C. Praises Work of Nebraska Women During War at Luncheon Given in His Honor.

"Omaha has more patriotism per square inch than any other city I have visited," said General Pershing in his talk at the luncheon in his honor at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday.

"It is a pleasure to me to meet the representative men and women of Omaha in this historic place, where so many notables were entertained during the war and where your great war work conferences were held."

About 500 persons occupied places at tables in the large dining hall for the luncheon. Fully 200 more stood in the doorways and around the edge of the room. General Pershing occupied the place of honor at the largest table. President John W. Gamble of the Chamber of Commerce sat at the general's right, and Mayor Smith at his left.

Son Faces Father.

Forty places were arranged at the general's table. His staff of officers, members of the reception committee, the notables from Washington, who were here to attend the aerial mail service inauguration and prominent members of the Chamber of Commerce occupied the seats. Warren Pershing, the young son of the general, sat at the table in a chair across from his father.

General Pershing's sisters, Miss Mae Pershing and Mrs. D. M. Butler; Mrs. S. R. K. Kivie, wife of the governor; Miss Helen Hall of Lincoln, Mrs. Ed P. Smith, Mrs. Francis Brogan, Mrs. H. H. Baldridge and Mrs. J. W. S. Wuest, wife of the Fort Omaha commandant, sat at a small table.

During his talk General Pershing said that he had one great fault to find with the arrangements which had been made for his entertainment here. He said he objected to being isolated at one table with men for whom he "cared very little or not at all" while "Omaha beauties were seated beyond reach."

Women Deserve Praise.

"The work of the women of Omaha and Nebraska is deserving of the highest praise," said the general. "They found occupation wherever the tender care of women was needed. This state was well represented abroad, where the women brought us a touch of the American home. We can never forget the encouragement that this attitude and these acts of kindness gave to us."

"After all it is to the women, our mothers, wives and sisters, that we men must turn out triumphantly."

General Pershing discussed the problem concerning the radicals or "reds" in his talk.

Is Cheered Two Minutes.

"There is a tendency among certain classes of alien residents to attempt to alter the form of government by force," he said. "A steady power against this spirit of unrest and such inclinations is going to be the men who were tried on the battlefields of France, associated with the patriotic men and women who backed them during the war."

"They must be taught that this is a government of individuals and not of groups of aliens. I am optimistic enough to believe that the great common sense and patriotism of the American people will solve this problem to the satisfaction of posterity."

An ovation of nearly two minutes was given General Pershing when he arose to speak. Cheers and applause filled the hall with echoes.

Former Omaha Girl Writes of Death of Husband in Berne

Friends of Mrs. Pierre Becheray formerly Miss Clara Heimrod of Omaha, will be grieved to learn of the bereavement she has suffered in the death of her husband at Berne, Switzerland, the news coming to Omaha in a letter written by Mrs. Becheray from Berne.

The death occurred November 10, writes Mrs. Becheray after three months of illness which left him so weakened he was unable to withstand attacks of influenza. The sorrow was a heavy one, she relates, and especially so upon the two children, the daughter Marcelle, having been passionately fond of her father and apparently unable to grasp the full significance of his passing away.

Referring to her future plans, and the possibility of her return to Omaha, Mrs. Becheray writes:

"I long to return to the states, and probably will, but when, and if forever, is hard for me now to decide. I feel that I have passed through so much sorrow in Berne that I would like to go back to where happier days were mine; and yet, the happy days with my husband draw me here."

Mrs. Becheray requests that notice of her bereavement be published in The Bee, as it is impossible for her to write to all her friends and acquaintances. The address is given as, "Mrs. Pierre Becheray, Helvetia Tr., 47, Berne, Switzerland."

My Heart and My Husband ADELE GARRISON'S New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

What Madge Read in Harriet Braithwaite's Eyes.

Harriet and Edwin Braithwaite did not seem to have changed much outwardly in the years that had passed since I had seen them.

They were a little older, their hair held more of silver than before, there were lines graven in both faces which had not been there when they sailed away—but the last few months had been in the nature of a rest for them, and both showed the beneficial effects of it. Dicky's sister retained her fresh, rather high coloring, while her husband was slowly regaining the flesh which had been his, and which he needed to make his big, powerful frame appear other than emaciated.

I have always felt unaccountably drawn to this sister of Dicky's, although the hours when I have seen her can be counted on my fingers. I do not care so much for Elizabeth, my mother-in-law's other daughter, with her brood of children—ill-bred cubs, if the truth must be told—over whom the mother constantly fusses, and to whose whims she tries to make everything else subservient. Elizabeth is an inefficient, querulous, "touchy" woman, while her sister, Harriet, impresses one as simply radiating efficiency and common sense.

She is much the same type of woman as Lillian Underwood, with the one great exception that Lillian's powers are spent for her friends and the public good as well as for her family, while Harriet Braithwaite has had but one object before her eyes all the years of her married life, the conserving of the comfort of her famous surgeon-husband.

He had not been famous when she married him. Mother Graham many times has recounted the saga of her daughter's devotion and its results in the swift rise of the gifted young surgeon to the dizzy heights of his profession.

Phrases from Memory.

"Edwin is as helpless as a baby." I have many times heard Mother Graham say. "He wouldn't know which cravat or waistcoat to put on, or whether he was shaven or had a handkerchief in his pocket if it were not for Harriet. He is as dependent on her as a baby is on his mother. She has always kept track of his appointments, social and professional, while his house has been run like clock work. I don't know what would become of him if anything happened to Harriet."

But as it chanced, I knew what had become of him when "something" had happened to Harriet.

From the lips of Katherine Somnot I had heard the story of Harriet Braithwaite's illness at the same time her husband was stricken, and of the famous surgeon's growing dependence upon the faithful, efficient little nurse, whose place in his hospital organization I had been able to secure.

"Richard Second" Wins.

That Edwin Braithwaite in the stress of that time and the awful conditions surrounding him had nearly lost his head, had been saved from making shipwreck of his happiness only by Katherine's common sense and his wife's rare vision and comprehension of him, I knew, as I did of the jealousy of my brother-in-law and her husband to ascertain whether all was still well with them.

It did not take me long to make up my mind regretfully in the negative. There was a haunted look in both pairs of fine eyes that affected me as a strain of mournful music would have done. Outwardly they were the same jovial, affectionate couple as of old, and, indeed, I do not think there was any perceptible change in their relations when there were no observers of their actions present. Whatever barrier was between them, and I felt sure there was, one, must be an impalpable, elusive sort of thing. One far more hopeless of elimination than if it had been something material. One, perhaps, which they did not themselves realize.

Both husband and wife took the shortest possible cut to my affections in their outspoken adoration of the baby. From their actions one would have supposed it was the first child either of them had ever been permitted to handle. The great surgeon would "play horse" by the hour with the baby, steadied by Marion, pulling his grizzled hair and pounding his broad shoulders, while his wife appeared to count it a distinct privilege to sit and rock my small son until he went to sleep.

"I know it's against all the rules," she said one day, "but if you could know what this means to me, Margaret, you wouldn't object."

Her face as she bent over the sleeping child was transfigured with love and something else, longing—which I think no one else had ever seen in Harriet Braithwaite's face. All at once the vague haunting look in her face at least was translated for me. She had sacrificed all thought of motherhood in order to make an absolute certainty of the brilliant career of her husband. Had it been worth while?

Divorce Courts

Joseph Voss expected to receive some of his support from his wife, Augusta, she alleges in a petition for divorce from him filed in district court. She says she started to quarrel with her ever money soon after their marriage in 1915. He deserted her, she alleges, April 1, 1919. "She asks for the restoration of her maiden name, Stelling."

An order restraining James Strand from molesting his wife, Sophy, in their home, 4132 North Fourteenth avenue, was issued by District Judge Day on her request contained in a petition for separate maintenance filed in district court. She says her husband has cursed and struck her and has threatened to beat her up. She asks for custody of their two small children.

On allegations of desertion divorces were granted in divorce court by Judge Wakeley to Mary Davis from Evan Davis and to Josie Glant from George Glant.

William Garner was given a divorce from Viola Garner by Judge Troup in divorce court on grounds of extreme cruelty.

Mari Mangu filed suit in district court for a divorce from Florea Mangu, charging that he frequently struck her and threatened her life.

Refused Soldiers' Names.

They refused to divulge the names of their intended husbands. "We can't get them in bad," one of them said.

The Bendon girl said she is known also as Marion Foster. Detectives learned that the Young girl has been using the name of Agnes Shelley, which name was forged on one of the checks, police say.

The girls are charged with forgery.

Mrs. Iva Bendon, mother of one of the girls, lives at 1909 Douglas street. She told police her daughter ran away from home several weeks ago.

ALLEGED YOUNG GIRLS FORGED TO GET TROUSSEAU Bought $30 Worth Silk Lingerie With Checks to Marry Soldiers.

In preparation for their intended marriages to two soldiers stationed at Fort Omaha, Virva Bendon and Marjorie Young, 16 and 17 years old respectively, rooming at 131 North Twenty-fifth street, picked out $340 worth of silk lingerie and other beautiful attire, comprising their wedding garments Wednesday at various downtown department stores, giving alleged worthless checks in payment.

Both girls were turned over to juvenile authorities yesterday on order of Police Judge Fitzgerald in Central police court.

The girls were arrested in a room at the Neville hotel, Sixteenth and Dodge streets, where they were trailed after having passed two alleged worthless checks for $190 at the Fashion store, 111 South Sixteenth street. The girls confessed yesterday to having tendered worthless checks at the Bendon-Thorne, Burgess-Nash and Benson-Thorne stores in payment for silk lingerie.

The girls told Detectives Lahey and Hughley, who arrested them, that they intended to be married to day to "two soldiers at Fort Omaha."
