DI MILO-

New. York, Jan. 20.—Transactions on the stock exchange today were the smallest and in most other respects the least significant of any full session for several weeks.

Surface indications so far as they had any drift at all, pointed to a sold out condition. This was obvious from the absence of selling pressure except at rare intervals and the gradual hardening of standard industrials stocks. standard industrials stocks.
Even the more volatile issues of recent floatation including those whose intrusic floatation including those whose intrasis values are yet to be established, remained mostly in the background.

Developments of the day embraced another drop in call or demand loans to lowest rates in several months and recurrent weakness in foreign echange. The London quotation fell to within 1½c of its minimum and new low levels of depreciation were registered by Italian, German and Austrian remittances. The federal reserve board was in conference at Washington during the greater part of the market session, but adjourned, according to the statement of an official, without taking further measures to curtail credits.
