DEFEATS DAKOTA AGGIES, 23 TO 11

Mulholland Proves Himself Backbone of Tommy Mills' Team: Kearney Out of Game.

Tommy Mills' crippled Creighton team took South Dakota Aggies' basket ball five to a drubbing last night at Creighton gymnasium by rolling up 23 tallies to the Coyotes' 11.

Although the Creighton team showed themselves superior to the Coyote quintet, especially during the first period, yet the absence of "Chuck" Kearney, sensational center for the Blue and White, who is injured, and the lack of practice were displayed consistently.

Eddie Mullholland, guard, distinguished himself as the backbone of the Creigton team, both on offense and defense. Mullholland's dribbling across the entire court time after time through the entire Dakota team, paralyzed the visitors' five-man defense and made possible the Seventh Victory for Corn-

Creighton victory.

Coach West of the Dakota school confidently hopes for victory in tonight's game at Creighton gym. "We outplayed Creighton during the sec-ond half of the game," West said after last night's contest; "we can do it again tonight in both periods."

The South Dakota players devoted most of their time toward guarding the Creighton goal.

All five men were frequently gathered under the Creighton baskets and around Eddie Haley and Jimmie ver and Wise tossed the ball to one will mfx again Saturday night. another unmolested.

In spite of the Coyotes' defense the Creightonites plunged through time and again and but for bad breaks in luck, would have rolled up half again as many points.
Following is the detailed score: Creighton-28.

ILU CRUTCHFIELD is the lassoingest cuckoo who ever deported himself east on one of Mrs. Pullman's arks. Bill is Will Rogers' cousin and can curve a loop like a landlord can raise the rent.

The lad is one of the original Stetson boys and wears an acre of hat It's one of those skull pans which require a drain pipe at each corner, and when Bill steps down Broadway, it looks as if Barnum's main top had grown ears and feet. The sun has throw up shoots to tan a guy under one of these lids.

Rogers could make a rope chirp like a canary, but Crutch is the first baby to teach a rope to spell. He throws a mean hawser that says good morning in the air. He can toss a boy's sized collar around a man's neck. One of his warming-up stunts is to throw a lasso over the top of a transom, through the eye of a needle and around a button that is hanging on a vest in a locked wardrobe. If that ain't some hemp shooting, we'll buy the next round of wood alcohol.

Out west around Denver there is a reptile called the moppery snake, the divided into two classes. There is the petty moppery snake, see the grand moppery snake, the the grand moppery snake, the the grand moppery snake, are some who will argue the affair was all framed in advance, but the grand mope nicks you, you flap to Heaven so quick that you then St. Peter. Just one nip of the grand mope, and you turn a back on the source of the which is divided into two classes. There is the petty moppery snake, whose bite is sure life insurance. Then there is the grand moppery snake. When the grand mope nicks you, you flap to Heaven so quick that you frighten St. Peter. Just one nip of the grand mope, and you turn a back flip flop in the air and come down with an epitaph on your vest.

footprints or country roads don't have ruts. Ever been to Colorado? It's a swift country. The minute you grab the receiver off the hook, central chirps you that the party doesn't answer. She doesn't have to know the number. They don't answer quicker in that neck-o'-the-woods than in any part of the works. And the grand mope is the nimblest thing in Colorado. It travels two ways at once and throws dust like a carpet taking a beating. There has never been a specimen in a zoo, but that ain't saying that Gene Fowler's word ain't as good as a Rassian bond in any land where cows don't moo. The grand mope is so sudden that it leaves a scorched trail.

Crutch knew that he had an ambassador's sized job on his hands, so he broke out his new Sunday lariat with the inlaid amethyst handle and a turquoise loop. Then he perched himself in the desert. Pretty soon a grand mope saunters by. Bill didn't see it, but he sees its shadow. Bill is the only cowboy who throws a lariat from the hip, which is where he grabs his speed. He watches that shadow shimmy around like Sam Langford waiting for a frightened heavyweight to stop fluttering around the ring. Sam knows that even a humming bird must light on a twig once in a while.

Bill missed with the first dozen gross of throws as he is anxious and knows that mope hunting is only legal in months ending in Z. Finally he cuts out his wind-up and shoots one that would be a balk in any league. The balk motion fools the more and Bill nips him by the fur of his left ear. At least that was all that was in the loop when Bill counted the day's receipts and went home to supper. Being a modest guy, Crutch doesn't, claim any credit for tagging the grand mope, as he says that all he saw was the shadow, and the mope must have been old and lame or it wouldn't have thrown any shadow.

Naturally, there is a lot of seeds who might think this story was written with a corkscrew on a spiral staircase, but Gene Fowler stands ready to swear to it on Doc Cook's diary. Bill still has his inlaid amethyst rope and everybody knows that the ancients regarded the amethyst as an antidote and a preventative of drunkenness.

We're personally slanted in the direction that the story is true, as we lamped Crutchfield rope a preserved tomato out of a can without open-ing the can, and Gene Fowler ain't a guy who would steer you wrong un-less he got a chance.
