PLAN TO MAKE A REFERENDUM MORE DIFFICULT

Provision Safeguards Spirit Of Act by Requiring Signs to Go Before An Official.

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 27.—(Special.)—Action by the constitutional convention to make it increasingly difficult to invoke the referendum seems likely in view of sentiment developing in the assembly Tuesday morning.

The convention went into committee of the whole and considered the initiative and referendum as a special order. The report of the committee, reducing the percentages of signers required for the initiative and referendum, was presented and then a series of amendments proposed. The delegates adjourned until Wednesday morning without final action.

To Lessen Signers.

After the report of the committee on initiative and referendum had been submitted, Delegate Walter L. Anderson submitted an amendment, embracing the same subject matter contained in his proposal on the subject, which had been killed by the committee. The Anderson proposal still further reduced the percentages required to invoke the initiative and referendum, as follows:

To initiate a law—Committee report, 7 per cent; Anderson amendment, 3 per cent.

For Constitutional Amendment—Committee report, 10 per cent; Anderson amendment, 4 per cent.

For referendum—Committee report, 5 per cent; Anderson amendment, 3 per cent.

To Prevent Abuse.

Delegate Anderson called attention to the fact that his measure carried two vital provisions to safeguard the spirit and intent of the initiative and referendum act and to prevent its abuse through reduced percentages of the required signers.

Under the provisions of the Anderson proposal, every signer of the petitions would be required to sign before some public official. It also incorporates more rigid provisions as to attestations of petitions.

The report of the committee was defended by Delegate Sidney of Dodge county, chairman, who explained it in detail.

Claims Husband Has Right to Make Wife Live Among Snakes

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 27.—(Special.)—Matthew Stuart Thompson contends that the husband has the right to choose the family domicile, in a brief appealing to the Nebraska supreme court from a divorce decree granted his wife, Edith, in Omaha on the ground that she had been forced to live among rattlesnakes and mice in a tent in the Nevada deserts.

Thompson argues that she knew that he was a miner and that his interests were in Nevada mines. They were married in 1905 and have one son.

Thompson charges her with taking the money he sent her to return to Nevada, after he had fitted out a suitable city home for her, and using it to get a divorce.

Eastern Paper Predicts Pershing Will Have Four States In the Convention

Washington, New York and Chicago Dailies Record Significance of Rising Pershing Boom and Decline of Wood's—Pershing Would be Stronger in Congress Than Any Other Man Mentioned.

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 27.—(Special.)—Personal friends of General Pershing and those interested in his candidacy for president believe there is just cause for the optimism manifested on their part regarding his ultimate success, especially since the Pershing boom formally invaded the east.

Conversing the situation among the political candidates to date there are many signs in the political bushes showing a direction of the winds favorable to the Nebraska general, chief among the indications perhaps have been the persistent reports in the Washington, New York and Chicago newspapers in which the significance of the Pershing boom has been emphasized.

Will Have Four States.

The Brooklyn (N.Y.) Eagle, recording the political pulsebeat in the Washington vicinity, also claims discovery in announcing the rise and rapid progress of the Pershing movement at an hour in which the Wood boom took on an obvious decline. C. C. Brainerd, writing from Washington to the Eagle, sees signs of trouble among the forces promoting the interests of General Leonard Wood. At the same time, he says, senators and representatives in the capital are leaning toward the candidacy of the greater general, and suggests, too, that Pershing, very probably will be given the delegations of Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana and Missouri, at the June convention, for a starter.

This corroborates, in part, the statement of Mark Woods, chairman of the Pershing organization, that General Pershing would have more pledged delegates at the Chicago convention than any other candidate.

Political writers and observers in Washington meanwhile are of the opinion that in the final showdown the race for the republican nomination will lie between General Wood and Pershing, according to a statement in the Baltimore Sun.

Between Army Men.

If the choice is to lie between the two army men, there is a greater hope for the Pershing forces, says the Sun, in reviewing the rival careers of the two soldier gentlemen.

"The pitting of these two distinguished officers against each other," reads the statement, "thereby naturally produces a picturesque situation. They have been professional rivals for more than 20 years, and to find them in the great contest for the presidency is a tremendously interesting development in the political history of the country.

There are reasons, however, beyond the military record of the two men which, no doubt, favor General Pershing in republican circles. They are reasons influenced by the political situation in this country and by our new interesting national relations.

Politically, the president of the United States for the next term of office, will need a united support from congress, if he is to effect any decided results toward reconstruction, and it will require a man with a following among both democrats and republicans to secure such unity.

General Pershing could secure a more united support from congress possibly than any other man so far mentioned for the republican ticket. He is followed by persons of all political faiths and has none of the thorough political enemies in congress which his opponents for the presidency could expect to encounter in carrying on the work of reconstruction.

For Country, Not Parties.

Under both democratic and republican administrations Pershing has been entrusted with some of the highest responsibilities ever given to any military man, and he has always worked faithfully and successfully, without regard to the party under whose directions he was carrying on his duties. This record has won for Pershing the recommendation that he works for his country, not for parties, and it is this recommendation that could be expected to enable him to unite both "of the great political forces in an administration of reconstruction surpassing that accomplished by any president yet entrusted with the destinies of the nation.

In the line of his experiences Pershing has had an opportunity to qualify himself for presidential responsibilities. He has handled American military and civil affairs in the Philippines with a high degree of success. He has represented our government in handling the Mexican difficulties, and probably understands the underlying causes of our troubles there as much as any other man today.

Has Studied Japan.

Pershing was stationed in Japan under Roosevelt's administration for a period of time that allowed him to study the institutions and the government of that country, and he knows Japan's military possibilities thoroughly as a result of his opportunity to follow the Japanese army at the front in the Russo-Japanese war, acting as a military observer for the United States.

His report on the organization and training of the Japanese army, together with a review of their system of fighting and tactics, has been characterized as the most complete and exhaustive report of its nature ever filed with the war office of the United States.

When called by President Wilson to handle our participation in the war on the side of the allies, Pershing was given opportunity to further his understanding of the complexities of Europe and the Orient, through dealings with the representatives of the allied powers in a capacity that enabled him to obtain a keen insight into political and economic situations all over the world.

In the light of broad, fundamental experiences with the nations of the world, Pershing has equipped himself with a knowledge of conditions surpassing that of any other man suggested for the republican nomination.

Eleven proposals in all were headed for the graveyard.

Youth Found Guilty Of Attack On Girls Gets 8-Year Sentence

Stanley Fox, 19 years old, in county jail-garb, stood before District Judge Redick yesterday and was sentenced to the state penitentiary for eight years. His mother sat in the court room and wept silently after the sentence was pronounced. He was found guilty by a jury in district court January 7 of a statutory crime. The complainants against him were Eva Turnquist and Belle Anderson, 16-year-old girls.

Fox, James O'Hara, Thomas Sullivan and Amos Gorman were charged with taking the two young girls in an automobile late the night of September 13, 1919, to a lonely road west of the city and there attacking them. Details which pointed to a plan to assault the young girls were related by the girls or the witness stand at the trials of Fox and O'Hara.

O'Hara was found guilty also and was sentenced last week to the penitentiary for one to eight years. Chief Deputy County Attorney Coffey prosecuted both cases.

Thomas Sullivan, another member of the quartet, fled from the city right after O'Hara was found guilty. Sullivan, in fleeing, "jumped" a $300 bond and abandoned his young wife and three children.

Fox will appeal his case to the supreme court. He is under $2,500 bond.

Governor Replies in Sharp Letter to the Criticism of Mayor

Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 27.—(Special.)—Mayor Ed P. Smith's attack on the code bill in a recent speech in Omaha is answered by Governor S. R. McKelvie in a communication in part as follows:

"You seem to have overlooked something in your reference to the unbounded power that is given to the governor by the code. The code gives no power at all. It only gives authority and fixes responsibility.

The governor points out that the cabinet form of government has been in force in Illinois nearly two years, and has been recommended by the governors of 14 states. He says that not a single constitutional officer has been eliminated by the bill, and that it has saved the state an average of $10,000 a month.

In closing he suggests that when the mayor starts making comments, he keep "somewhere within the facts."

MAYOR OPPOSES ANY INCREASE OF POWER CO. RATES

Says Present Patrons Should Not Bear Burden of Improvements — Detailed Statement Issued.

Mayor Smith takes issue with the Nebraska Power company in its arguments offered yesterday before the city council for an increase of 20 per cent in electric light and power rates. J. A. C. Kennedy, representing the company, stressed the client's desire to expend $2,000,000 on improvements during the next two years.

Protect Present Patrons.

"The present patrons should not be required to pay for improvements," the mayor said. "A general rule of business is that improvements necessary for extension of business, if generally follows that increased business means lower overhead expense and lower rates. Your argument would lead us to believe that rates must increase as your business grows."

Mr. Kennedy stated that the company is unable to care for increased business with present equipment. The company's application for increased rates was placed on file. City Commissioner Ure's ordinance, providing for lower rates, will be called up for discussion before the city council committee of the whole next Monday morning.

Want Detailed Statement.

The council will demand that the company present a detailed statement of its operations since 1915 before further consideration will be given to the application for an increase of rates.

The Chamber of Commerce committee in 1915 reported a valuation of $4,500,000 for the light plant, and I would like to know just how much the company has spent on improvements since that valuation was made," said Commissioner Ure.

"The company is now requiring its patrons to support a valuation of $15,000,000, which is made up of the outstanding bonds, preferred and common stock and short time securities."

Plays Guilty to Conspiracy To Murder Negro; Fined $200

James Shields was fined $200 and costs by District Judge Redick yesterday on his plea of guilty to a charge of conspiracy to murder Will Brown, the negro, lynched by a mob at the court house the night of September 28, 1919. A charge of first degree murder, originally found against him by the grand jury, was dismissed on recommendation of that body.

My Heart and My Husband ADELE GARRISON'S New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

What Harry Underwood Did for Made.

When I have grown so senile and doddering that my memory fails me altogether I shall be able to forget the motor drive through the wood road to Southampton in which Harry Underwood "set the pace." Until then it will be one of the most vivid of my recollections.

To him, of course, it was an ordinary speed. But to me it was a Valkyrie-like ride, in which with set teeth and flying locks, my one thought was to keep Mr. Underwood's car in view.

The nature of the winding road made this impossible at times, but it would be only a few minutes before I caught sight of him again. From the way he kept looking back I judged that though he was "setting the pace" he was yet keeping strict watch upon my driving, accommodating his ideas of speed to my inexperience, and this thought was the only solace I had in the difficult task I had before me.

For, queer enough, considering the aversion which I had felt for Harry Underwood, I now watched him as a child would gaze at a father in time of peril. The thought of the man somewhere behind me on the road, the man whom Mr. Underwood's graphic tongue had pictured as letting no opportunity slip to spy upon me, terrified me so completely that I was glad to forget everything disagreeable about Harry Underwood and to remember only with deep thankfulness his great physical strength, his quickness and resourcefulness, and his expressed determination to protect me at all hazards.

"All hell can't get at you, if I only get the chance to be in the way," he had said, and the very profanity gave me a sense of security that nothing else could, which was characteristic of the old dare-devil Harry Underwood I had known, who stopped at nothing if he was enlisted in the cause of a friend.

There were few cars on the road, and we were going at such a pace that no cars had passed us. Instead, Mr. Underwood had gone past three and I had obediently but fearfully followed—an experience which made me feel as if my heart was detached from its usual position and pushed up into my throat.

A Favor Asked.

As the miles reeled off behind us, however, with no accident and no sign of the man pursuing us, I became less terror-stricken, more accustomed to the tricks of driving which Mr. Underwood was unconsciously showing me. I began to be able to take my eyes occasionally from the speeding machine in front of me, almost to enjoy the whip of the exhilarating early autumn air against my cheeks.

As if he had guessed my feeling, Mr. Underwood suddenly drew up his car by the side of the road, alighted, and came back to where I had stopped my own car when he had given me the signal.

"We're about out of the woods now," he said. "The rest of the road is fairly straight, and there are more houses along it. And, let me tell you, you're all to the mustard as a driver, little girl.

"I always knew you were pretty nifty at anything you undertook, but I never expected you to do as well as you have today. We've covered the ground in short order I can tell you, and I don't believe our friend can catch up to you now unless he's commanded somebody's body's racing car. So if you'd rather toddle on home by yourself, go ahead. I'll linger along the road here and sort of rattle him a little if he does happen to show up. What do you say?"

"I had not thought an hour before that my tips would be altering the words I found myself pouring out to Harry Underwood. But the fear of the man who had threatened Alice Holcombe and me had become such an obsession that the very thought of finishing my journey alone without the protection on which I had been unconsciously leaning since the appearance of Harry Underwood upon the scene, robbed me of bravery, almost of self-control.

"Oh, please—don't!" I began, changed my phrasing frantically in humiliation at my own cowardice. "If you don't mind, if it isn't too bother to you, I'd much prefer to go on as we were. I—well—you—could—stay somewhere near until—"

My Prophetic Soul.

"You poor little kid!" His deep voice was suddenly filled with a beautiful tenderness. "I didn't dream you were scared as stiff as all that. Don't worry any more. I'll stick till the brimstone lake freezes over and deposit you in front of your own door. I only thought I could perhaps serve you better this other way.

"But we'd better be hitting up a pace again. My prophetic soul tells me that son-of-a-seacock back there might have a streak of luck and catch up to us, and I'd like to be a little nearer civilization before he does it."

The hum of a racing car came faintly to our ears. Harry Underwood threw up his head and looked in the direction in which we had come.

"It'll be d—d if he hasn't turned the trick," he said.

Lisco Light Plant Burns; Town Now in Darkness

Lisco, Neb., Jan. 27.—(Special Telegram.)—Members of the John Mitchell family, who occupy living rooms in the front part of the garage of the Mitchell Motor company here, escaped in scanty garments this morning when fire destroyed the garage and light plant of the company.

The town is in darkness as a result of the blaze, since electric current was furnished by this plant. The fire was discovered about 2 a. m. and is thought to have been caused by a short circuit in the wiring system.

Twenty automobiles were burned, with a large stock of accessories and the household effects of the Mitchell family. The loss is estimated at $40,000, partially covered by insurance.
