THE CHICAGO OPERA SEASON.
RCHITECTURE is frozen music. The Chicago opera singers have thawed it out and are busy slinging it at each other. You can always tell when the opera season cuts loose in Illinois. First you hear a soprano voice knocking off an intermezzo-bawlingoutto, followed by a chorus of police whistles. Then follows a heavy beevotone, accompanied by an augmented orchestra of ambulance gongs. On the back of Adams Express company blanks are nimble words dodging all responsibility for fire, earthquakes, strikes, riots and war. That's the old blanks. The new blanks include Middle West opera seasons. In time of war, Chicago was a peaceful bailiwick. The Great Lakes canoe flotilla protected 'em from the cruel Hun and the opera stars were on the city title until they meet the back in their native countries honing up their voices on garlic, limburger and other ethereal food of dainty songbirds.

The first guy to run the trachoma blockade at Ellis Island was Signore Vodka Yellovitch. During the war, the Signore's voice was as silent as a nickel piano trying to digest a lead slug. Between the Allies and the Protzky boys, the Signore was a busy guy trying to keep between 'em. He arried his betweening too far when he landed in Chicago between a contralto and a soprano. The Signore is as gallant as he is talented. He sings himself into a lady's heart and then bows himself out. The lad is also very crafty. He marries one wife during a republican administration and another when the democrats are grabbing the government pay, thus making a political question out of a felony. Having four or five extra wives in Russia doesn't annoy the Signore, who falls in love at first sight and then develops astigmatism.

They chirp that even Carl Mucks is willing to flap back to Boston and play the "Star Spangled Banner," providing that he is allowed to toot it on a clockenspiel. America is a great feeding ground for the alien song hawks who grab their fish here and flap back home to eat 'em.

Thelatest battle started when Mme. Dolorous La Bunk, the great French bella donna, refused to sing in Italian, because it might affect her old man's chances of being elected alderman from the Stockyards district. Her old man's name is Counihan and everybody knew it after the third drink. He is still living, being one of the few relics of the souscolithic age

Well, it's a great show and Chicago is welcome to 'em. We hand 'em their opera with the same cheerful unselfishness of the slave handing Cleopatra the viper. We wish 'em the joy of the worm. Everybody is happy when the orchestra leader pokes his baton into the cage and the works bust loose like a zoo around feeding time.
