Pierce-Arrow trucks are still running after 8 years. This assurance of absolute reliability takes all of the speculative element out of truck buying.

An idle truck means an idle driver, repair bills, no deliveries. The money you "save" in buying a cheap truck you quickly pay out for an idle truck, frequently in the first year.

> Nos. 4 & 5 are both owned by the National Cash Register Company in Dayton. Used for short haul work, neither has run over 50,000 miles. Both trucks are still "young", and able to deliver as satisfactorily as ever.

Their service has been distinguished by their ever-readiness. They have never been called upon that they have not met the call. No task has been too heavy. Eight years is by no means the measure of their capacity, nor perhaps twice eight.
