"In Bartholomew's Lane, on the back side of the Old Exchange, there is a drink called COFFEE, having many excellent virtues, fortifies the heart within, helpeth digestion, quickneth the spirit, maketh the heart lighter, is good against many ills, and is sold both in the morning and at three o'clock in the afternoon."

The above advertisement, probably the first ad for coffee, was published in the "Publick Advertiser" of London in 1657.

In those days of the Coffee House, noted in the history of Old London, coffee was a popular drink, though not common in the household. Coffee was considered a drink of sociability and the Coffee House the meeting place of the intellectual.

Coffee in those days probably came from one country, was of one selection and likely ungraded.

Today coffee is greatly improved and comes from many different countries, each growing a different type of coffee. For instance, there are eighteen (18) different varieties of coffee and eight (8) different grades, so that in our Butter Nut Coffee we have a perfect blend, as the secret is in assembling the varieties of coffees of the best grades and blending them into one perfect drink, characteristic for its fragrance, richness and deliciousness.
